Roosevelt "Revolution" Ended, President Veers to Right

THE Roosevelt Revolution is now over. The President's policy of "hitting a little left of Center" is edging in toward the Center itself, sometimes even hitting a little Right of Center.

The reason, of course, is that Business, once supine and sick, once openly ready for vital economic change, now is feeling itself again.

Roosevelt's problem no longer is Revolution but consolation. It was reasonably easy to accumulate sweeping powers from Congress when that body—panic-stricken by the Depression—was in a giving mood. Making use of these powers, making the reforms stick, is harder.

This is what is behind the White House visit of Oswald Garrison Villard and other New York liberals today (Friday). The crusading contributing editor of "The Nation" wants to hammer home to Roosevelt the idea that his future lies in keeping Left.

Probably Roosevelt will concur with Villard a wisdom of "keeping" somewnat Left. But as for "going further" Left, that is out. The Roosevelt Revolution is finished.

Ministress to Ireland?

Mrs. Daisy Harriman, most delightful Democrat in Washington, was lunching the other day at the Women's National Democratic Club which she once revitalized. Friends were extending congratulations on the move to make her American Minister to the Irish Free State.

Once a great friend of Woodrow Wilson, Mrs. Harriman was appointed by him as member of the Labor Board. But, while she remained Democracy's most outstanding lady, and although various other Democratic women have been rewarded under the New Deal, Mrs. Harriman has continued in the job-line. Reason: She was not a "Before Chicago Rooter for Roosevelt." In fact on the floor of the Chicago Convention, she voted against him.

Now, however, there is a real chance that she may join the New Deal as a lady diplomat.

"I suppose if I really get the job," she mused, "I'll have to buy myself a green dress."

Wall Street Sabotage

Behind the refusal of New York banks to accept certain checks on the French and British Governments is the violent antipathy of Wall Street to the Johnson Bill.

The Bankers figure that the Bill—prohibiting defaulting debtor nations from borrowing money in the United States—will ruin the New York money market. They fear Europe will now go back to London as the world's great money center. So they are out to make the Johnson Bill look ridiculous.

This was what Charles de Fontnouvelle, Consul-General of France, discovered when he turned up at the New York Federal Reserve Bank one day last week with a draft on the Bank of France. The draft was to pay for the rent of his counsulate, salaries etc., and for years he had been getting it cashed promptly. This time, however, the Federal Reserve refused.

"We are extremely sorry, M. de Fonthouvelle," the cashier informed him," but the penalties under the Johnson Bill are so rigorous that we cannot take any chance. The terms of the Bill are rather vague, and until they are clearly defined we cannot take checks on the Bank of France."

M. de Fontnouvelle was flabbergasted.

"We will be glad to take your own personal note," the bank official informed him. "It will be a loan to you personally, and not to France."

So the note was signed at six percent interest and the French Consul-General was able to pay his staff.

Meanwhile French war veterans living in New York and receiving checks on the Bank of France ran into the same trouble. The Chase National Bank even turned down the exchange of French bank notes.

LIQUOR STORE IS READY FOR OPENING HERE

Wilkes Building, W. Main-st, Stocked; Hinchman is in Charge

PERRILL GETS JOB

Madison-twp Man Named Instead of Weaver

Pickaway-co's liquor store opens Saturday at noon, William Hinchman, temporary supervisor, disclosed Friday.

The store has been stocked, the list of available liquors has been posted on the wall, cases are in place, so are desks and everything is ready for the influx of business which, it is predicted, will not be so great.

Mr. Hinchman, of Columbus, is acting as supervisor until the state liquor commissioner appoints a Pickaway-co man to fill the vacancy left when Adrian Yates declined the appointment naming ill health as his reason. The position pays $150 monthly.

TWO MENTIONED

It is believed the appointment will be given to Milton E. Friedman or Dale Wyker both of whom were certified as eligible at the time of the civil service commission examination. The new supervisor is expected to be announced early next week.

A new development had entered the local liquor store today when it was learned that Russell Perrill, of Madison-twp has been appointed as clerk instead of Earl Weaver, W. Union-st, who was previously announced as the clerk.

Mr. Perrill was one of the three certified by the commission as eligible for appointment but when Mr. Weaver's name was announced in Col. John A. Hughes' office as the selection for the clerkship Perrill was thought out of the running. Weaver learned this week that the Madison-twp man had been ordered to report for work.

NO REASON GIVEN

The reason for the change could not be learned.

R. G. Peters, N. Court-st, has been appointed as cashier.

Mr. Hinchman, Friday, explained how to obtain liquor in the store on W. Main-st.

The 'menu' is found on the wall. After selection of the brand desired the purchaser obtains an order blank; lists the kind he

FROSTS DO LITTLE DAMAGE TO FRUITS

Heavier Frost Expected Tonight; Lack of Moisture Aids Crops.

COLUMBUS, April 27.—Damage to fruit and other crops has been slight despite heavy frosts during the past severa l nights, agricultural experts here said today.

Fair and continued cold, with heavy to killing frost is predicted for tonight, but weather bureau observers believe that damage again will be slight. Orchardists have reported to the weather bureau that the dry weather prevents serious harm to crops.

Apples are not far enough along yet to be damaged by the frost, according to Wendell Paddock, professor in horticulture at Ohio State university.

However, there is possibility of some damage to early plums, pears, and peaches, the few that have escaped the severe winter weather, Paddock said. It is not likely that this damage is great, he said, because these early crops are already cut to the minimum by the winter weather.

FAVOR KERR FOR CRESWELL POST

CINCINNATI, April 27.—Kenneth Kerr, Wilmington newspaper man, probably will be named U. S. marshal for the southern Ohio district, succeeding Paul H. Creswell of Xenia, who sent his resignation to Attorney General Homer S. Cummings, it was reported today.

Although his four-year term will not expire until Dec. 20, Creswell submitted his resignation, to become effective upon the appointment and qualification of a successor, "in order to be in a position to accept another situation that may present itself prior to that time."

Recommendation of a successor to Creswell will be made to the attorney general in Washington by U. S. Senator Robert J. Bulkley.

'BREAK' NEAR IN KIDNAPING

Kidnapers Believed Contacted by Mystery Emissary of Robles

TUCSON, Ariz., April 27.—Law and order yielded temporarily today to the kidnapers of June Robles, 6-year-old heiress granddaughter of Bernabe Robles, millionaire cattle king.

An army of 2,500 searchers was called off at 6 a.m. to permit her father, Fernando Robles, to negotiate with the kidnapers for payment of $15,000 ransom.

TUSCON, Ariz., April 27.—The kidnapers of June Robles, 6-year-old heiress granddaughter of Bernabe Robles, pioneer Arizona millionaire cattle king, were contacted directly last night, according to a reliable police report today.

An emissary of the Robles family, his identity shrouded in mystery, failed however to arrange negotiations for the safe return of June who is being held for $15,000 ransom. She was "snatched" from a city street while returning home from school Wednesday afternoon.

Following instruction received in the first ransom note the representative of the Robles family drove along a lonely desert road shortly before midnight.

A masked man stepped from mesquite brushes and directed the emissary to halt.

RETURNS TO TUSCON

After a 30-minute conference the Robles emissary returned to Tucson. Whether he made a future date with the asserted abductor was unknown.

Although the Robles intermediary carried considerable money, possibly the entire $15,000 demanded, and was ready to deal with the kidnapers for the return of the chubby faced little heiress, he is said to have reported to officers that the mystery man did not have June with him and was not prepared to offer proof that the child actually was in his possession.

Secrecy enveloped the strange midnight desert rendezvous. Dep-

GAS BLASTS KILL THREE

11 Others Badly Hurt as Leaking Mains Are Blamed For Explosion.

CHICOPEE, Mass., April 27.—Three persons were killed and 11 others injured today, several critically, when gas main explosions demolished four homes and damaged 15 others in Chicopee Falls.

The dead:

Mrs. Mary Pronko, 40.

Two unidentified dead.

A series of four explosions, in rapid-fire succession, blew one home apart and laid it flat on the ground, and demolished three other homes.

Small fires, which followed the explosions in three houses, were extinguished by firemen.

The detonations were so terrific they could be heard for miles around and the force of them was felt for more than a quarter of a mile.

Leaking mains under the ground were believed to have allowed gas to seep into the homes, resulting in the blasts.

Father of Nine Shoots His Wife, Commits Suicide

Domestic, Financial Worry Is Blamed For Act of Perry-Co Farmer.

NEW LEXINGTON, April 27.—A double tragedy was enacted here early today when Raymond Zartman, 46-year-old farmer and father of nine children, shot and killed his wife and then fired a bullet into his own head.

Zartman died as he was being rushed to a hospital here. Ambulance attaches said he collapsed and succumbed while struggling against being taken to the hospital.

Children of Zartman said that domestic and financial troubles were responsible for the tragedy. The nine children range in ages from five to 20 years.

After fatally shooting his wife, Zartman fired his gun into his own head under the chin. He was still alive when the ambulance from New Lexington, summoned by the children, arrived at the Zartman home located two miles south of Glenford.

The ambulance attaches said that Zartman struggled viciously against being taken to the hospital. During the tussel, the farmer fell from the ambulance cot and collapsed from exhaustion. Shortly afterwards he died.

SENATE ROUTS 2 TAX PLANS; INCOME 'EYED'

Gross Receipts and Sales Taxes Voted Down in Quick Action

MEET NEXT WEEK

Democrats Leave White in Sales Vote

COLUMBUS, April 27—Working far into the night in a futile attempt to pass a permanent tax program, the Ohio senate defeated the gross receipts tax and the sales tax in succession and adjourned early today until next week when it will again tackle the problem that has flabbergasted the legislature for 16 months.

The gross recepits tax, foundation of a $22,000,000 program, met its waterloo first. It mustered only 11 favorable votes, or six less than the 17 required for passage, and when they saw defeat inevitable two senators changed their vote from "yes" to "no," making the final count, 9 to 15.

SALES TAX, TOO

Hours later after interminable debate and the adoption of so many amendments that Sen. J. G. Lowery (R) New Concord, described the bill in its present form as "a crazy quilt not even stitched together," the senate, voting for the first time on a sales tax, rejected it, 13 to 15, the measure falling short of adoption by four votes.

The original rate of 2 per cent contained in the sales tax bill as introduced by Sen. Will P. Haynes (D) West Lafayette, had been first raised to 3 per cent and finally slashed to one per cent, in which form it was when the roll was taken.

However, its initial defeat in the senate does not mean the upper house is through with the sales tax. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the measure was defeated, put forward by anti-sales taxes in the hope that their own motion would not carry, thus sounding the final death knell of the bill, unexpectedly did carry, whereupon the bill was sent back to the senate tax committee for alterations.

TO ADD INCOME TAX

A meeting of the tax committee was called by Chairman D. J. Gunsett (D) Van Wert, for next Monday night. He said the one per cent sales tax bill would be polished up and that the program would

DILLINGER HENCHMAN IS BELIEVED SURROUNDED IN WISCONSIN WOODS

George "Baby Face" Nelson Reported Seen; Search Intensive

NEW CLUES HEARD

Five to Face Charges of Harboring

By THOMAS F. CULLEN
International News Service Staff Correspondent

ST. PAUL, Minn., April 27.—Federal operatives who are stubbornly and grimly seeking the trail of killer John Dillinger today redoubled their efforts to capture George ("Baby Face") Nelson, a Dillinger henchman believed to be hiding near Fifield, Wis.

Seizure of Nelson, a ruthless machine-gunner, government sleuths believed, would prove a profitable step in the widespread hunt for Dillinger.

Confident they had Nelson surrounded in a wooded area, the officers made a careful invasion of the gangsters hideout. But Nelson evaded them. Nelson is the member of the Dillinger mob who shot down and killed Federal Operative W. Carter Baum in the Spider Lake, Wis., resort gun battle.

"NEW INFORMATION"

It was learned that within the last few hours fresh information was discovered which may bring the Dillinger gang's last roundup.

United States District Attorney George Sullivan prepared to go before the federal grand jury today to present charges against five persons who are alleged to have given assistance or medical treatment to the fugitive.

Sullivan announced that the information he had concerning the charge that Dr. N. G. Mortensen gave medical treatment to Dillinged and his first lieutenant, John Hamilton, would be presented to the grand jury. Dr. Mortensen was suspended from his post as city healt officer for treating bullet wounds of the two gangsters on March 13 last.

In addition Sullivan will lay before the grand jurors the evidence he has against Evelyn Frechette, Dillinger's Indian sweetheart; Mrs. Beth Green, widow of desperado Eugene Green; Dr. Clayton J. May and Mrs. Augustus Salt.

CHARGES HARBORING

He will ask indictments against them for harboring and concealing Dillinger while the desperado was blazing a trail of robbery and bloodshed through the middle west.

Evelyn Frechette is alleged to have been with the gang leader March 31 in a Lexington-ave apartment when It was raided by federal agents. Authorities charge that it was she who backed an automibile from the garage while Dillinger held the officers off with machine gun fire and then drove the wounded desperado away from the ambush scene.

Dr. Hay and his nurse, Mrs. Salt, were said by police to have treated the fugitive on several occasions for the gunshot wound Dillinger received in the March 31 battle with officers.

The physician claims that Dillinger forced him and Mrs. Salt at the point of a machine gun to treat a bullet wound in his leg, just above the knee, at the home of Mrs. Salt.

Planes, Armored Autos Demanded by Cummings

WASHINGTON, April 27.— Airplanes, bomb and machine-gun equipped, armored motor cars, and automobiles that will go as fast as those used by criminals, will be enlisted into the government's war against organized crime, Attorney General Cummings declared today.

The war department has already offered the use of aircraft.

Cummings expects Congress to appropriate sufficient funds to provide the motor equipment. He said the government has been handicapped because the criminals were equipped with the speediest automobiles, many of which were heavily armed and protected from bullets by armor plate.

The killing of W. Carter Baum, department of justice agent, in Wisconsin Sunday, when John Dillinger, arch-bandit, escaped emphasized the seriousness of the crime situation, Cummings deferred to this slaying as a setback in the governments drive against organized crime, but added it simply spurred the department to a finish fight against the underworld.

He hopes Congress will now enact the often-recommended legislation making the killing of a federal agent a federal offense. While it is a crime against the government to assault a federal agent, there is no legislation to penalize the killing of such an officer under federal law. From many standpoints, it would be advantageous to the government to try such cases as the killing of Baum in the federal courts.

U. S. AGENTS IN 'MYSTERY'

31 Men Concentrated In New England; Probing Lindbergh Money?

BOSTON, April 27.—While officials of the department of justice maintained a strict silence, persistent reports at the federal building today were to the effect that the 31 federal agents who vanished as mysteriously as they appeared from a Rutland, Vt., rendezvous, today were concentrating on Albany, N. Y.

This theory apparently resulted from a cryptic text 21 Rutland high school boys, many of them caddies at the Pine Hill golf course, were asked to write. It was;

"If you meet us at the Union station in Albany on either Thursday, Friday or Saturday of the last week in April your troubles will be over and we will never trouble you again. On your ar-

After a series of complications concerning the identity of Phillip McGrath and after Henry Dodge has several narrow escapes with his reputation every thing turns out all right.

Henry Dodge, George Clements. Is a young business man and the leading citizen of the small town of Mayfield. He is self-important and dignifiel in manner.

Betty who is played by Helen Skinner is the sister of Henry Dodge. She is a very pretty, winsome girl of perhaps seventeen. She is gay and impulsive.

Josephine or Mrs. Dodge(Martha Conman), is an attractive young woman. She is quiet and respects her husband and his wishes very much. She is blessed with a sense of humor.

Jane is a matter of fact serious girl, about twenty. She is a bit acid with Betty and she languishes over Alfred. This part is effectively played by Jean Overmyer.

Mrs. Wiggins (Doris Morris) is the mother of Mrs. Dodge. Her manner is brisk and dictatorial but she is very human and has a biting sense of humor.

Alfred Dukes (Burtus Bennett) is a nice looking boy of about twenty, but a little awkward and self-conscious. He is the next door neighbor of the Dodges and is fascinated by Betty.

Geranium (Locigale Canterbury) is the young colored girl who is cook in the Dodge home. She has a slow tired manner of talking and will draw laughs from the audience.

Matilda Tucker played by Anna Mae Russ is a fussy little person of uncertain age and a busybody if there ever was one, but in spite of this she is quite likeable. She is a great talker and does love the center of the floor.

Phillip McGrath (William Hoskins) is a good looking chap and a typical college man, breezy and pleasant. He likes excitement and gets plenty of it. He finds Betty to be his one desire.

Spasm Johnson (George Speakman) is the faithful servant of Phillip. He is a colored boy and slow of speech and action and will prove very entertaining.

The baccalaureate services for the graduating class will be on Sunday evening, May 13, at 7:30. Rev. Rose will deliver the sermon. Music will be in charge of a local committee under the direction of Frank Beatty.

A very interesting program is being arranged for the May meeting of the P. T. A. It is to be entirely a musical program put on by the pupils of the entire school. Miss Betts has arranged some very interesting and entertaining numbers from her work this year. Every grade in the school will be represented. This program will be given Thursday evening, May 3, at the school auditorium. Plan to come and see what our music department has been doing.

The honor roll for the past six weeks in the first and second grades is as follows: Auttie Fyffe, Willis Neff, Glenn Rowland, Lorraine Shade, Theodore Ensley, Delores Huffer and Dave Mounts.

Perfect attendance: Willard Conte, Junior Dean, Auttie Fyffe, Ray Mounts, Willis Neff, Lorraine Shade, Theodore Ensley, Glenn Rowland, Wanna Brigner, Francis Caudy, George Coey, Delores Huffer, Billie Kennedy, Dave Mounts and Pauline Swank.

The first and second grades are now working on a farm project. The farm is being made from sponges. Along with this project they are writing stories and drawing free hand pictures about the farm.

The primary room has just finished a cleanliness contest. All of the pupils received a badge for having a perfect record.

The pupils in the first and second grades are reading the Pupil Reading Circle books. They are enjoying the books very much and most of them are planning to receive a certificate at the end of the year.

Laughing Around the World

With IRVIN S. COBB

The Voice of Protest

By IRVIN S. COBB

A DISTINGUISHED bishop of the African Methodist Episcopal Church in North Carolina was entertaining a number of his preachers at a chicken supper, following the holding of the annual conferences.

Except one very small and very black presiding elder, all present were of an impressive size and bearing. So probably it was only natural that in serving the guests the host should entirely overlook the little man.

Presently the time came for replenishing the plates, and now the bishop saw the small figure wedged in behind two wide, broad-clothed forms.

"Brother Jones," he inquired in his best pulpit voice, "will you have more chicken?"

"More?" shrilled Brother Jones indignantly,—"More? Huh! I ain't never had SOME yit!"

TESTIMONIAL COMPLIMENTS CHEVROLET

Former Circleville Woman Tells Local Dealer Car Satisfies Her.

The following unsolicited testimonial was handed to us by a former Circleville lady who is a well satisfied CHEVROLET owner:

"I drove a CHEVROLET from GREENFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS, to CIRCLEVILLE, OHIO, in 24 hours, a distance of 764 miles at a cost of $7.43 for gas and oil. This included three passengers and was the entire cost of gasoline and oil."

(Name on request.)

We have this lady's statement in her own handwriting and signed by her.

Another satisfied CHEVROLET user gives us the information that on an 880 mile run over the mountains of West Virginia and into North Carolina that his mileage on gasoline exceeded 22 miles to the gallon over the entire trip.

You, too, can save on your mileage cost if you will investigate CHEVROLET.

Helen Evans

(The Stenographer)

Says. . .

"I Pay For Our Gas And Other Small Bills"

HELEN EVANS, the stenographer, earns a modest salary and lives with her parents in a home of moderate circumstances. She does not pay regular board—instead she takes care of the many little household bills as her part of the family upkeep. Helen finds that their gas bill is the smallest of obligations she has to meet.

But Helen Evans watches her nickels and doesn't believe in paying more for something than it is worth. That's why she checked up on gas to compare its value with substitute fuels. She found gas to be worth several times the amount asked for it for general household purposes. The other day she overheard her boss saying that the gas situation made a great football for ambitious politicians. Now Helen thinks she knows the reason for all the talk about gas rates, and she still believes gas to be one of her greatest bargains.

National census figures also show what Helen found to be true—that gas is the least item in the average family's budget. Cut its price in two and the saving barely would be noticed in most homes. But a few cents, up or down, means the difference between profit and loss to a company that is rendering you an excellent service. Isn't it better to preserve your gas company as a stable business in the community?

Lighter Dishes, Gelatines and Plenty of Vegetables Recommended By Mrs. Geo. O. Thurn

Dear Friends in Circleville:

The balmy first days of spring are a great temptation to lighten up on the cookery. And while I am certainly in the foremost ranks of those who want less work for the housekeeper, yet I know that this very temptation sometimes leads to unforeseen and unwanted ends.

Good meals can be planned with less work; can be easily prepared and quickly served. Especially if you use modern equipment, the new labor-saving devices, the cleverly designed utensils now found in all parts of this country. But in making the menu, its constituents, Winter and Summer, Spring and Autumn should include the essential nourishing ingredients. See that fruits and vegetables, both raw and cooked get into the menus daily, a little meat, something baked which includes the cereals and grains (breads, rolls, cakes, baked rice, macaroni and other cereals); milk to drink, other beverages which are intended for appetite appeal more than as nourishers.

At this season especially when the appetite needs more tempting dishes, it is true that the heavier meats, the richer pastries, the more lavish sauces found in winter cooking may be temporarily put aside. Or at least they may be served less often and some of the lighter dishes introduced.

Fruits and Vegetables

It is now that fruits and fruit juices deserve more space on the home menu. Serve orange juice daily; or tomato juice, or both; serve canned fruits as fruit cocktails, in simple tarts, in gelatine mixtures, and frozen desserts. Add grapefruit and other fruits found at the grocers to the daily fare; and have fruit on hand for those between-meals snacks which children and grown ups are sure to want. Especially now, for the children are playing out doors more, and using up more energy, hence increasing appetite. And grown ups are "feeling the spring" even if they have no garden in which to work, no hoops to roll down a sunny path.

Green Gelatine Salad

Here's a salad you will like for some Spring luncheon. It is seemingly light, but is nourishing without being filling.

One half cup small sweet cucumber pickles sliced; one half cup stuffed sliced olives; one half cup blanched almonds; one half cup canned, sliced pineapple cut in small pieces; one fourth cup mild vinegar; a little green vegetable coloring; one half cup sugar; one fourth teaspoon salt; one half cup hot water; one tablespoon granulated gelatine; one half cup cold water. Pour the cold water into a bowl and sprinkle the gelatine on it, stirring until the gelatine dissolves. Then add the sugar, salt and the half cup of hot water and stir until dissolved. Then add the vinegar and a few drops of green coloring, to make it about the color of mint jelly.

Let cool, and when the mixture begins to congeal add the other ingredients. Rinse a mold in clear cold water, and pour the mixture in. Let chill in the refrigerator, then unmold on crisp lettuce and serve with mayonnaise. If made in a ring mold, like the one illustrated, fill the center with a fresh salad, of radishes, thin sections of cucumber, crisp cabbage, all marinated with a little French dressing, and topped with a little mayonnaise. Delicious with cheese crackers.

Spaghetti with Sweetbreads

Another "light" addition to the menu is the use of the meat organs, instead of so many roasts and large steaks. The sweetbreads are usually welcome at this season.

For the dish, which serves six, have ready; one pound sweetbreads; one and one half cups spaghetti broken into four inch lengths; one cup cream; three eggs; one fourth cup grated Parmesan cheese; one teaspoon salt one fourth cup dry bread crumbs two bouillon cubes, or two cups stock; one half cup boiling water two tablespoons butter; three tablespoons flour; one additional half cup cream; one small can mushrooms, (about one cup.)

Drop the spaghetti into boiling salted water and cook rapidly until tender. While the spaghetti cooks, heat the cup of cream to the scalding point in the upper part of an enameled double boiler; beat the egg yolks, add the scalded cream to them gradually, stirring all the while to prevent lumping.

Return to the double boiler and cook, stiring constantly until it coats the spoon. Remove from heat, add the cheese and salt and stir until the cheese melts and blends smoothly with the sauce. Drain the spaghetti through a colander. Combine the custard and spaghetti, cool slightly and fold in the stiffly beaten egg whites. Turn carefully into a baking dish rubbed with shortening and sprinkled with the crumbs. If possible use ring baking pan, such as illustrated, and set this in a shallow pan of hot water; if no ring pan is to be had, use any baking dish, and in the center use a small glass baking dish, inverted, the outside rubbed with shortening and springled with crumbs. This makes the souffle bake in a ring, leaving the center free.

Set the dish, as for the ring pan in a shallow pan of hot water and bake at 350 degrees, or moderate oven, for forty-five minutes, or until golden brown. Remove glass bowl and fill the center of the souffle with the following sweet bread mixture. Or if ring pan is used, turn souffle out on a hot platter and quickly fill with the sweetbreads, serving at once.

Parboil the sweetbreads in water containing a tablespoon of vinegar; remove skin and cut into one half inch cubes. Dissolve the bouillon cubes in the one half cup boiling water; melt the shortening and flour and stir until smooth, then add the cream and bouillon liquid gradually, while stirring to keep smooth. Finally add the sliced mushrooms and sweetbreads and cook over hot water for fifteen minutes. Chicken or tuna fish may be used in place of the sweet breads; but this dish in any case is a pleasant variation of creamed chicken and other creamed dishes served at guest luncheons.

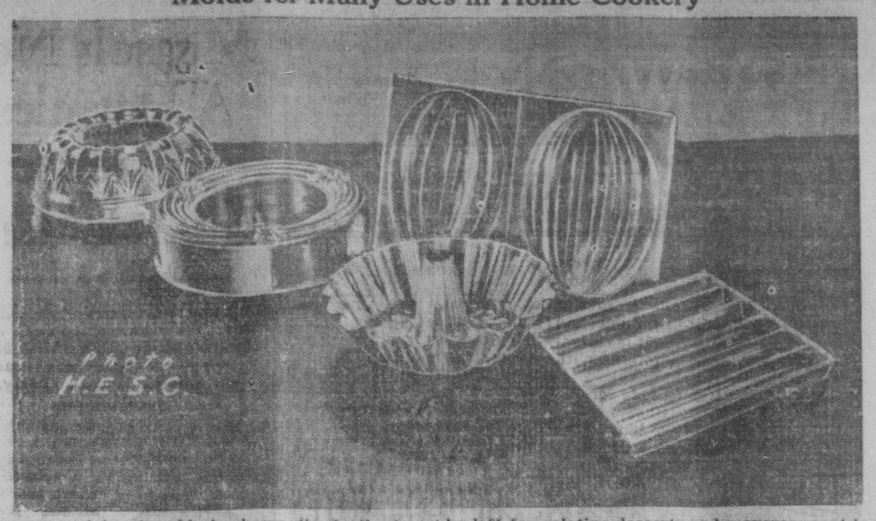
Eggs and Sardines

Another dish for guest luncheons or home supper is made with eight hard cooked eggs; four large smoked sardines; one half teaspoon salt; one fourth teaspoon paprika; one half cup rice; two tablespoons butter.

Wash the rice and cook in enough water to cover until tender, rinse quickly under cold water, then put in the oven to fluff and dry a little. Spread half of the hot rice over the bottom of a shallow baking dish. Press into the rice the eggs which should be prepared this way:

Peel shells from the eggs carefully. Cut in half crosswise; remove the yolks. Add to the yolks the mashed, boneless sardines, salt and paprika and mix until smooth. Fill whites with this and press back together. Over the eggs spread the rest of the cooked rice. Dot top with small dabs of butter and bake in a hot oven, 400 degrees, until the surface of the rice is crusty and delicately browned. Serve with tomato sauce or Hollandaise. Enough for eight servings.

Molds for Many Uses in Home Cookery



Above a variety of molds is shown, the furthest at the left for gelatine desserts and mousses; next is ring mold especially recommended for vegetables, also gelatine salads; in the center is the fluted, funnel cake pan so admirable for tortes and sponge cakes; behind it is the melon mold for gelatines of many kinds and frozen mixtures; in front is a bread stick pan. Such pieces are essential to the house where guest luncheons and dinners are of frequent occurrence.

Mrs. Geo. O. Thurn Gives Delicious Old Time Coffee Cake Recipes and Some Others

Dear Readers in Circleville:

So many times the Cooking School audience asks for simple cakes to serve with afternoon tea and coffee, to tuck into the children's school lunch box and the husband's lunch box. The coffee cake, or Kuchen as German housewives call it, is ideal for this. So many good recipes are available but I have selected from them three outstanding ones which are sure to please most families.

The German recipes nearly always use thinly sliced almonds on top of the cake; blanch the almonds first by pouring boiling water over the freshly shelled nuts; let stand a few minutes, then rub off the brown husks in a clean tea towel. Let the nuts dry, then slice thinly with a sharp paring knife. Or grind in the food chopper, or chop in the chopping bowl.

Raisins, brown sugar, cinnamon and granulated sugar are other decorations usually found on top of the finished coffee cake. It is seldom iced, although the bakers in the large cities have in recent months been pouring a yellow, lemon-flavored boiled icing over their simple coffee cakes. This does make the cake festive in appearance and adds a new flavor to it as well. Use your own judgment and taste about this. I prefer the old fashioned type either with sugar and cinnamon, or with sliced almonds.

Coffee Cake

The following cake mixture should be baked in a shallow, flat pan. Use one and one half cups sugar; one fourth cup shortening; two eggs; one cup milk; two and one fourth cups flour; four teaspoons baking powder; grated rind of one lemon; chopped or sliced almonds, about one half cup.

Blend the shortening and sugar, add the beaten egg yolks, and the lemon rind stirring constantly. Mix the flour and baking powder and sift twice, add to the first mixture alternately with the milk. Last stir in the stiffly beaten egg whites. Rub the shallow pan with shortening, pour in the batter. Sprinkle with granulated sugar and cinnamon and the sliced almonds. Bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees, twenty-five minutes.

Blitz Coffee Cake

One cup shortening; one cup sugar; four eggs; two cups flour; two teaspoons baking powder; the grated rind of one lemon; one half teaspoon salt; one teaspoon vanilla. Blend the shortening with the sugar, add salt, lemon rind and vanilla, the beaten eggs one at a time, beating well as they are added. Then add the flour and baking powder sifted together. Stir well, bake in an oblong shallow pan rubbed with shortening, in a moderate oven, 350 degrees, for one half hour. Spread with a little unbeaten egg white when done and sprinkle thickly with brown sugar and cinnamon.

Lunch Cake

One half cup shortening; one cup sugar; three eggs; rind of one half lemon and of one half orange; juice of one half orange; one tablespoon lemon juice; one teaspoon vanilla; one cup milk; two cups flour; four teaspoons baking powder; ten raisins.

Blend the shortening and sugar well together, add the eggs one at a time, beating constantly, then add the fruit juices and flavoring. Mix the flour and baking powder and sift twice, then stir into the first mixture alternately with the milk. Place the raisins in the bottom of a deep, round fancy tube cake pan (this pan is called a bundt) which is well rubbed with shortening. Pour in the cake mixture and bake forty-five minutes or an hour, in a moderate oven, 350 degrees.

Sand Torte

Six eggs; one cup sugar; one cup shortening; one half teaspoon salt; one cup cornstarch; one cup flour; one half lemon, juice and rind; two teaspoons baking powder.

Blend the shortening and sugar well together, add beaten egg yolks, mix the flour, cornstarch and baking powder together and sift twice. Add to the mixture with the lemon juice and grated rind. Fold the stiffly beaten whites into the batter. Bake in a square or round cake pan, well rubbed with shortening, for forty-five minutes in a 350 degrees, or moderate oven.

Lemonade Cake

One and one half cups sugar; one fourth pound almonds chopped fine; one and one half cups grated whole wheat bread or crumbs; one fourth teaspoon bak-

Convicts in Traces

CODDLING of convicts may be condemned without going to the other extreme of advocating inhumane treatment for those who have violated society's laws.

The general tendency in the recent years has been to cater to the comfort of those behind the bars. Modern prisons with conveniences closely resembling those to be found in hotels have replaced in some states the forbidding gray-walled institutions of former days that housed felons. Baseball and football have been introduced and other forms of recreation and amusement made available to the inmates.

None of these things are to be found in Arkansas, though, it seems from a recent news dispatch telling how convicts are being used as beats of burden on state prison farms. On one of the farms, the superintendent admitted that 36 men had been "put in the traces" to pull cotton planting machinery. His explanation was that the state lacked money with which to replace several mules that had died. So the resourceful superintendent "hitched up" the convicts.

The picture of human beings converted into farm animals by a state government is not a pleasing one. Arkansas could eliminate this practice without being accused of coddling its convicts.

Selling to Germany

DR. Paul Hertz, German Socialist leader now in exile, warns that "If the United States grants Germany credits for raw materials in any large quantities, the United States will be responsible for the next war in Europe."

He bases his conclusion on the assumption that Germany is prevaring for war and says that when preparedness reaches a sufficient state "war will come to distract the attention of her population from internal conditions.'

There is, as he asserts, a general belief that the policies being pursued by the Hitler regime, if unchecked, will lead eventually to war.

The United States, of course, doesn't wish to hasten this or to be a contributing cause. But to refuse to take advantage of trade opportunities because of the mere possibility that it may be supplying materials which eventually will be used in war would be taking a short-sighted view of conditions.

If it can extend credits on a sound basis, we see no moral objections to such a course. It sells to nations in war. Why should it not sell to those which eventually may be involved in war?

SYNOPSIS

After three years' travel in Europe, where she had gone following her father's death, young and beautiful Stanley Paige became bored and returned to New York to find the "something sort of sweet and important" which she felt she was missing. Stanley finds Perry Deverest, handsome young lawyer, still as much in love with her as ever, but her own heart is untouched. She longs for someone to love—someone to really belong to. Then she meets the fascinating Drew Armitage. It is love at sight. Drew's most recent heart had been sophisticated Dennis St. John. In breaking with her, he said: "You know, Dennis, you're a lot like me—you know when a thing is ended and you accept it—gracefully." Marcia Wingate invites Stanley and Drew to a dinner party.

"He's certainly gone to pieces this spring. Still handling your affairs, Stanley?"

CHAPTER SEVEN

Marcia's dinners were always pleasant affairs. She liked to entertain and did it graciously and incessantly. Tonight she sat at the foot of her long Italian table and admired the high candles in their Renaissance candlesticks, admired the yellow roses that spilled carelessly over onto fine damask, admired her husband who sat eating his fish at the opposite end of the table.

Ned was good-looking, he was a little brilliant, he was entirely successful. Marcia was glad she had married him. They agreed on all the little things in life and ignored the bigger ones. It made their relationship pleasant and uncomplicated. Ned was doing exceedingly well in the dignified profession of the law. Tonight Marcia looked at him down the length of her table and wondered how it would seem to be the wife of a Justice of the Supreme Court, She hoped he wouldn't get fat.

Conversation was always rapid and even a bit sparkling at Marcia's parties. Not being particularly clever herself, she was wise enough to surround herself with people who were—as a consequence, she basked in a sort of reflected glory. People always spoke of "Marcia's clever parties." One naturally inferred that Marcia, herself, was clever. There were a few who knew she wasn't. Nigel Stern, for instance, and Marcia herself. Her husband had never even suspected it. Which proves, perhaps, that Marcia wasn't so stupid after all.

By the time they had passed from fish to entree, Marcia had decided satisfactorily in her own mind exactly how much Angela Rand had paid for her Vionnet gown, whether Beth Crampton really couldn't have children or just didn't want them, whether or not Nigel Stern was having an affair with Sandra Frayne. Perhaps that was why Marcia missed so many opportunities to say clever things—she never really put her mind on any conversation—it was always wandering off by itself, quite oblivious to what her lips were saying.

Tonight, having disposed of these questions satisfactorily, she turned her attention to Stanley and Drew Armitage. She had known Stanley for years—intimately, she would have said and not been quite sure about it. She rather thought that no one had ever known Stanley Paige intimately. Even as a schoolgirl there had been a certain aloofness about her, a shy withdrawal from intimacies. Marcia decided the girl had been too much alone—first in a big house with only servants for companions, later at schools where she had never really lost her shyness, then those years abroad with that impossible person, her aunt. There had been that one winter in New York, of course. Stanley had been very gay that winter—very happy. Marcia though it a pity she had not married Perry Deverest then and escaped those years in Europe. And now she was back again and anyone could see for the looking that she was hopelessly in love with Drew Armitage. And the humorous part of it was that everyone had been so sure she had come back to marry Perry. And now Perry had gone off north on a fishing trip and Stanley was seen everywhere with Drew. Well, things happened that way, Marcia supposed, and sighed and looked at Ned at the other end of the table, beyond the glow of the candles and the spilled gold of the roses, and was glad she had married him and hoped again that he wouldn't get fat.

An hour later Ned Wingate, being dummy at the same time that Stanley happened to lay down her hand at the next table, strolled over to her and suggested that they go outside for a cigarette. They went out through French doors onto a narrow balcony.

He held a lighter to her cigarette, sat down beside her on the slender iron railing. There were boxes of petunias on the balcony—they moved softly in a gentle breeze.

"Seen anything of Charles Carleton lately?" he asked, referring to the man who was legally responsible for Stanley's inheritance.

"Not for a week or so—he had dinner with me when I first came back. I thought he looked sort of shot—" Through the half-opened doors Stanley could see Drew's dark head bent over his cards—as usual the heart-twisting line of his profile clutched at her heart, left her sweetly shaken.

"That's what I thought—saw him at the club this afternoon. He's certainly gone to pieces this spring. Still handling your affairs, Stanley?"

"Oh, yes—" She brought her eyes back to Ned, smiled at him absently.

"Full power of attorney, I suppose?"

"I suppose so—I really don't know much about it. I'm like father, Ned, I hate business. I don't understand it—he didn't either, you know. Charles Carleton always managed everything for him, they were very close friends."

"Yes." Ned nodded slowly. "I've heard my dad tell about them. Well, I was rather shocked to see the old boy looking so ragged. You don't happen to know what your money's invested in, do you, Stan?"

"Oh, the usual thing, I suppose—whatever money is invested in on Wall Street," she shrugged lightly. "It's never interested me much."

"No," replied Ned, equally careless, "I suppose not. Everything's probably all right, anyhow, but when I saw Carleton looking so sort of shot—I rather wondered. They say he's playing the market pretty hard, Stan."

Stanley tossed her cigarette into the darkness; she wondered if Drew had missed her. If he would look up from his table and smile at her when she went back in. If she only imagined it, or if he did have a different expression in his eyes, which was just for her. "I thought men who had offices on Wall Street always played the market hard," she told Ned lightly. "Anyhow, he's made a lot of money for me—I can afford to lose some."

"You probably won't. Carleton's pretty shrewd. He's been in the game a long time."

"Hey, you two out there," called Johnnie Crampton, "are you playing bridge—or aren't you?"

They went in. Drew did look at her and Stanley felt suddenly warm and breathless. She slipped into her chair and failed to raise Nigel's heart bid. They made three extra tricks. They had needed them for game. Stanley hoped Nigel didn't mind too much; Nigel assured her he didn't.

Measels Not A Harmless Disease

Neglect May Lead to Complication of Dangerous Nature

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.
United States senator from New York
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City

THERE IS a popular and unfounded belief that measles is a necessary and harmless disease. Because of this there is apt to be a carelessness which may prove serious. Neglect may lead to pneumonia or some other serious complication.

Dr. Copeland

It is unfortunate that so many mothers take it for granted the disease must be expected. I have known of many children who have been deliberately exposed to the disease. I cannot speak too strongly about the dangers of such a practice.

The disease may be exceedingly mild in one child and when contracted by another member of the same family it proves to be exceedingly serious. It is particularly dangerous when it afflicts infants or other children under five years of age. The disease itself is easily controlled; the menace lies in the many serious complications that follow it.

Bear in mind, that broncho-pneumonia is the most common and fatal complication of this so-called "mild" disease. Diphtheria, scarlet fever, whooping cough, chicken pox, or tuberculosis may follow an attack of measles. The ailment may affect the ears, eyes, central nervous system, or the heart. It is wise to look upon it as a serious disease which must never be neglected.

Since it is highly contagious and quickly spreads from one child to another, it is imperative that it be recognized in its early stages. As a rule, the child first complains of a slight cough and other symptoms resembling a common cold. The sore eyes and running nose, make it probable the trouble is really measles.

About the fifth day of illness, the characteristic skin rash of measles appears upon the skin. It is first seen behind the ears and about the neck, but rapidly spreads over the face and remainder of the body.

The child should be kept in bed and not allowed to play with other children. Protect the eyes from sunlight and glaring lights. A good plan is to bathe the eyes frequently with lukewarm boric acid solution.

The disease is contagious until after the rash has disappeared. This lasts about five days and is followed by "desquamation" or peeling of the skin. The disease is also spread by sputum and discharges from the nose. For this reason, children with measles should be provided with plenty of soft paper handkerchiefs which can be burned after being used.

This is the time of the year when measles is unusually prevalent. If cases are present in your neighborhood, guard your children against it. Every precaution must be taken to prevent the spread of this disease. It is a serious one and must never be accepted as a simple ailment.

MOVIES

AT THE CLIFTONA

There are some things in life that anyone can afford to miss, and still enjoy a full existence. Taxes, floods, famines, installment payments, and radio imitations, for instance.

There are other things which one can't miss, and still claim to have lived. Among them is hearing ZaSu Pitts sing. At least, that's the word of those privileged to hear the fluttery comedienne warble in the RKO-Radio comedy, "Sing and Like It," which comes to the Cliftona Theatre Saturday.

Once experienced, it is a thrill that can never be forgotten, declare those who have seen the screen satire, and bigger and better laugh muscles are said to be the inevitable result of the treat.

As Annie Snodgrass, ZaSu Pitts comes into her own as a prima donna with what is described as a heart-touching rendition of a sentimental mother song. And it is around the effect of this ballad upon the soul of a callousted gangster that the plot of the rollicking farce revolves.

A NIGHTMARE

Do you want to have a nightmare
Every time you get in bed;
Do you want to have a fight there
With a monster thorough-bred;
Would you like to have it buck you
All around its stable room,
Like good fortune used to duck you
When you rode a worn out broom?

It's a fright to meet that nightmare
Every time you go to sleep,
Even tho there be a light there
Where the ghostly shadows creep;
It will paw and snort and kick you
'Til you think you're almost dead;
It will tantalize and trick you
As you jump around the bed.

There's a way to get that nightmare
Every night in all the year;
Everything is always right there
So you'll spooky voices hear;
Live so conscience will indite you
Every night with guilt and care,
Tho there is a lamp to light you,
You will have a nightmare there.

JAPAN TO EXPLAIN HANDS OFF POLICY

TOKYO, April 27.—Fearing the United States, Great Britain, and other signatories of the nine-power treaty might invoke the pact to force her to explain herself, Japan today capitulated and decided officially to elucidate her 'unofficial' policy of "hands off China."

A formal statement will be issued and signed by Foreign Minister Koki Hirota fully explaining the unofficial statement issued by the foreign office spokesman to the press several days ago, startling the world with the declaration Japan would not approve of foreign military and economic aid to China.

FOLLOWS DEMAND

The decision to offer an official version of the Japanese policy followed a firm request by Great Britain for such a step, and a milder request for elucidation made by American Ambassador Joseph C. Grew. Previously the Japanese foreign office had taken the stand that "enough had been said," and that "the statement spoke for itself."

Although Japanese authorities had regarded issuance of a formal statement as unnecessary, the growing demands for clarification of Japan's policy on China and the necessity of publicly and officially explaining her intentions to the world's officialdom resulted in an about-face.

Japan now is eager to take the initiative in an explanatory move in order to avoid being forced into a position where signatories of the nine-power treaty could take action under it to force Japan to explain her position. A clause of the treaty provides for consultation among the signatories in the event there arises a question of application of the treaty.

Questions and Answers

Will you please tell me how to make the glaze that is used for pie crust or bread?

For giving a glossy finish to bread, brush over the top when nearly baked with a paste made this way: Stir two tablespoons of cornstarch or potato starch into a cup of water. Bring to a boil, and boil for just a moment. The glaze is tasteless. For pie crust, a raw egg mixed with 1 tablespoon of cold water, and stirred until the egg and water are blended is used to glaze the top. If the whole egg is used the crust will be tinged a yellow color. If just the white is used, the top will have a colorless gloss.

How hot should water be for greatest efficiency in laundering? Should clothes be boiled?

Research laboratories for soap and fabric manufacturing companies recommend using water at temperatures below boiling. The highest temperatures suggested for cottons and linens is 130 degrees. Woolens, of course, should be laundered in cooler water, 90 degrees F. being hot enough, and higher temperatures produce a felting and hardening of the fabric. Silks may be washed in water from 90 degrees to 100 degrees F. If clothes must be boiled to disinfect them, put the wet clothes into fresh, hot, soapy water and boil them for 5 to 10 minutes. Prolonged boiling tends to yellow the clothes.

How can butter be measured solid? If the water method is used how is that employed?

When a recipe calls for ¼ C. butter, it means solid butter. Use a measuring cup, fill it ¼ full of water, then put butter into the cup until the water rises to the top of the cup. The amount of butter measured will then be ¼ cup. Pour out the cold water and the butter is ready to use.

Burn Something?

Do not put water into anything that has been burned because that instantly spreads the burned taste into all of the food in the pan. The burning has occurred because there is not enough liquid there and adding any liquid will carry the burned taste to all the food. If potatoes burn, put the unburned potatoes in a pan, cut the burned portions off those scorched and return them to a clean pan, containing boiling water, and continue cooking if they are not done.

Chipped Beef and Pineapple For A Hot Luncheon

1 can pineapple, No. 2 size
½ lb. chipped beef

Drain pineapple and cut it into small cubes. Melt butter in a frying pan. Add diced pineapple and fry until slightly browned. Break up chipped beef into small pieces and remove stringy pieces. Place in strainer and run cold water through it to remove excess salt. Then add beef to the pineapple in the frying pan and add the juice of the pineapple. Allow to simmer for 5 to 6 minutes and serve with hot biscuits.

JERSEYS, CAPS ORDERED

Eight teams all backed by a responsible industry or business firm will trot onto the field in natty new attire when the season opens on the Southern Ohio Electric Co. field. Several of the teams ordered new jersey and caps, Thursday, and will have their outfits here ready to be donned for the first week of play. One or two teams which have not yet ordered their jersey and caps should do so at once so everyone will be equipped and ready when the season opens.

All managers are to have their $5 entrance fee, their list of 12 players, a description and the color of the jerseys and caps, be ready to suggest names for president, secretary and treasurer, and any other officials needed for the league, and also be ready to suggest possible umpires for the league.

An umpire's duties this year will be very well regulated. The official softball rule book will be available for each umpire, all he will have to do is use his best judgment in calling balls and strikes. The book will guide him on the proper rules.

DISPUTES ARE 'OUT'

One iron-bound rule this year will be that no player has a right to dispute an umpire's decision. The only persons allowed to question a ruling are the manager and captain of the team in question. More cooperation with umpires will be sought by every team in the league.

William Justice, service director, expects to have the field ready for play by the early part of next week so several practice sessions can be held.

It is expected the schedule will be drawn tonight with the Softball rule book providing permanent schedules for 8-team leagues. The team managers will draw numbers from a hat to be either 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, or 8. Team Nos 1 and 2 will play the opening game, 3 and 4 will play Tuesday, and 6 on Wednesday, and 7 and 8 on Thursday with Friday night left open for any postponed contests.

The meeting tonight starts at 7:30 o'clock and with much business to be transacted it is hoped all managers and captains will be here promptly.

ing powder; one fourth teaspoon cinnamon; grated rind of one lemon; six egg whites; one cup lemonade.

Mix the first five ingredients with the grated rind and add the whites of the eggs beaten to a froth. Place in a spring form, or round cake pan, rubbed with shortening, and bake in a fairly slow oven, 325 degrees, for about an hour. While the cake is still hot, pour one cup of hot lemonade over it, a teaspoonful at a time until all parts are well saturated.

Maple Pie

One and one third cups (one can) sweetened condensed milk; two thirds cup maple syrup; one half cup pecans; one fourth teaspoon salt; one half cup whipping cream or two egg whites; two tablespoons granulated sugar; vanilla wafer pie crust.

Thoroughly blend the milk and maple syrup in a heavy sauce pan. Bring to boiling over a low heat, and boil, stirring constantly, about four minutes until the mixture thickens. Cool. Chop pecans and add part to mixture, saving the rest for the top. Add salt. Pour into pie tin (9 inch) which has been lined with vanilla wafer crust. Cover with whipped cream or meringue made by beating egg whites until stiff and adding sugar. Sprinkle with remaining chopped pecans.

If meringue is used, bake until it browns a little in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) Chill before serving.

Vanilla Wafer Pie Crust

Roll enough vanilla wafers to make three quarters cup of crumbs. Cut enough vanilla wafers in quarters to stand around the edge of the pie plate. Cover the bottom of the plate with crumbs and fill in the spaces between the wafers. Pour in the filling as usual.

BAKERS & LEMONS

Another interesting bowling match is scheduled for this evening with the Bakers trying to gain revenge for a beating taken this week from the "Five Lemons." The match is booked for 8 o'clock.

The Bakers won the first match the teams played but the Lemons evened the series with a good three game total early this week.

Tonight's match is the "rubber."

SENATE ROUTS 2 TAX PLANS; INCOME 'EYED'

be rounded out by including an income tax. While Gunsett personally entertained some hope his own defeated gross receipts tax could be revived the sentiment of the committee appeared to be against this.

With even sales tax proponents admitting that a rate of one per cent, as contained in the bill at present, would be inadequate even in conjunction with a small income tax, the tax committee was expected to exercise its authority of boosting the rate to 2 per cent.

Even though the committee succeeds in formulating a combination program around a 2 per cent sales tax and an income tax, many observers doubted that concurrence of the house of representatives could be obtained to enact the measures into law. The lower house previously has defeated a program of that nature.

Although the sales tax as introduced in the senate was understood to be an administration measure, the roll call showed only five Democrats voting for the bill They were: Annat, Cleveland; Bower, Rushsylvania; Donovan, Toledo; Mosier, Cleveland, and Haynes, West Lafayette, the author.

Eight Republicans joined the four Democrats in trying to put the one per cent sales tax across. They were; Gingher, Columbus; LeFever, Glouster; Lewis, St. Clairsville; Lloyd, Portsmouth; Lowery, New Concord, Marshall, Cleveland; Roberts, Youngstown, and Ruff, Canton.

Senators voting against the one per cent sales tax were:

Democrats-9-Espy, Cincinnati; Ford, Chillicothe; Gunsett, Van Wert; Harrison, Cleveland; Herner, Monroeville; Matthews, Enon; Smolka, Cleveland; Waldvogel, Cincinnati, and Yoder, Dayton.

Republicans-6-Emmons, Akron; Handley, Cincinnati; Sheppard, Akron; Whittemore, Akron, Pfeiffer, Columbus, and Wolfe, Mansfield.

On the gross recepts tax measure only two Democrats, Anna, Cleveland, and Gunsett, Van Wert, voted for it. Gunsett later changed his vote to "no."

Nine Republicans cast their vote for the bill, Emmons, Akron; Gingher, Columbus; Lloyd, Portsmouth; Lowery, New Concord, Pfeiffer, Columbus; Roberts, Youngstown; Sheppard, Akron; Whittemore Akron; and Wolfe, Mansfield. Whittemore later changed his vote to "no."

Senators voting against the bill were:

Democrats-9-Donovan, Toledo Espy, Cincinnati; Herner, Monroeville; Haynes, West Lafavette Harrison, Cleveland; Mosier, Cleveland; Smolka, Cleveland; Waldvogel, Cincinnati, and Yoder, Dayton.

Republicans-4-Handley, Cincinnati, Lewis, St. Clairsville; Marshall, Cleveland, and Ruff, Canton.

COLUMBUS, April 27.—Armed with a subpoena, R. Kirk Mee, sergeant-at-arms of the Ohio senate, was to leave for Cleveland today to notify Thomas Batt that he must appear here on Monday before the special senate liquor investigating committee and explain who purchased 105 cases of confiscated liquor from Geauga-co authorities.

ARREST ORDERED

Batt, who according to testimony of Rep. P. E. Ward (R) Chardon, conducted negotiations for the purchase of the liquor, did not answer when the senate investigators called his name at the hearing yesterday. If he is not present on Monday, Sen. Carl D. Sheppard (R) Akron, said his arrest would be ordered.

The senate committee is endeavoring to trace the purchasers of the confiscated liquor on the assumption that it was diverted to bootleg channels. Witnesses have testified that Geauga-co authorities, without knowing the identity of the actual purchaser, delivered the liquor to Cleveland in a truck, where agents of the buyer met the cargo at the city limits and insisted on taking it to the warehouse themselves alone.

The yellow-haired porcupine is Colorado's largest rodent, next to the beaver, says Nature Magazine. It occurs abundantly in the mountain country but it is a great wanderer and often is encountered far out on the plains. Not infrequently adventurous individuals invade cities and towns, and they have been discovered wandering unconcernedly on the busiest streets of Denver.

rival in Albany, you will receive $1,000 for your trouble."

3 POINTS STUDIED

A threat to kidnap a prominent Vermont man or member of his family, a new trial in the Lindbergh baby ransom case, a drive on an international narcotics smuggling ring - these were the three high points of speculation in the unusual hunt of the large squad of department of justice agents in northern New England and northern New York state.

Another point was that possibly the federal agents on the hunt for a kidnaping gang in Vermont hoped that the solution of the Rutland case would throw light on the Lindbergh kidnaping.

Upon his return to Boston, Charles D. McKean, chief of the bureau of investigation for New England for the department of justice, said:

"I was in Rutland on a confidential matter. It was not related to the Lindbergh kidnaping case."

Questioned Chief McKean admitted that the Rutland affair was an extortion plot and also admitted that no one has actually been kidnaped.

The unusual investigation in Rutland had been linked with the Lindbergh case when certain officials at the federal building hinted that $30,000 of the $50,000 Lindbergh ransom money had appeared at the Boston Federal reserve bank. This however, was denied in Washington.

The French Government cabled an immediate protest to the State Department. Unable to interpret the Johnson Bill, Secreary Hull referred the question to the Attorney-General. Fooled Again

Clarence Darrow has fooled them again.

The aged Chicago criminal lawyer was made head of the NRA Code Review Board chiefly because it was thought he and his liberal reputation would make good stage dressing. No one thought the aged veteran of the McNamara brothers prosecution, the Leopold-Loeb case, and the Dayton monkey trial would be able to stay awake through the hearing on the monopolistic effects of NRA codes.

But they didn't know their Darrow. He not only stayed awake, but he promptly became a most dominating figure.

A report dressing down General Hugh Johnson's code has been completed. The Darrow touch is upon it in a big way. The language is so caustic that some persons whisper it will never see the light of day.

But they are mistaken. The document was scheduled to be laid before the President last week. The pressure of other affairs made it impossible for F.D.R. to see Darrow. It is a safe bet that the report will reach the public. Darrow has been in the game too long to permit himself to be silenced.

Merry-Go-Round

Certain that some form of stock exchange control legislation is to be enacted this session, the Wall Street opposition fight has now shifted to trying to make the measure as innocuous as possible . . . Latest strategy is the whispered threat that if a "tough" bill is passed, it will be thrown into the courts in a protracted constitutionality test . . . The same dire warning was muttered by the money boys last year when the Securities Act was under consideration, but to date nothing has happened . . . According to Senator Harry Byrd, when his mother was asked what she thought of her South Pole exploring son's latest stunt—burying himself in a tiny cabin in the Antarctic wastes to make meteorological observations—she replied: "The only thing I worry about is that he was always a poor cook" . . . Nebraska's Representative Edgar Howard, who wears his hair down to his shoulders summer and winter and is always attired in a swallow-tailed coat, began his political career 43 years ago as secretary to William Jennings Bryan . . . Howard claims he speaks four Indian dialects, but nobody in the House is able to test him out.

British Ruling May Bar Them From Air Derby

The action of the Royal Aero Club of Great Britain in making last-minute change in rules and regulations of London-Australia air derby has brought bitter protest from the American National Aeronautic Association. F. Trubee Davison, former Assistant Secretary of War, secretary of the contest committee N. A. A. designated Aero Club's attitude as "ridiculous," charging that it would bar most American long-distance planes. According to the ruling only standard commercial planes would be eligible for the prize—more than $60,000. U. S. fliers with special speed planes, such as Colonel Roscoe Turner, Jimmy Doolittle and Jimmy Wedell, would be barred or obliged to build new planes conforming to specification required by rules. Amelia Earhart, too, Mrs. Louise Thaden and Frances Marsalis, who were reported entrants in the race, will have to get new planes if the Aero Club adheres to its drastic ruling.

Tucson, colorful university city and center of a vast cattle and mining country, virtually was under martial law today.

State highway patrolmen armed with shotguns halted every automobile entering or leaving the city. Scores of sedans that answered the description of the "black snatch car" were searched.

2,000 IN SEARCH

The gigantic man hunt, into which the full resources of the state and county, aided by federal government agents, have been thrown, reminded pioneers of the days when Geronimo and his Apache raiders were tracked by government and cowboy posses.

More than 2,000 men now are searching for June and her kidnaper.

Not since the eighties and nienties when gun crazed adventurers, faro dealing gamblers and blood thirsty cattle rustlers packed their six-guns from one saloon to another has this historic western settlement seen such an armament.

War veterans with Krag riflers, Mexican border patrol men and customs officers with gleaming pistols, police with machine guns and hard rock miners with antiquated arquebuses, patrolled the city and surrounding areas.

More than 10,000 Tucson homes have been searched from cellars to attacs by the American Legion.

As a result of the house-to-house search Farrar said today he was convinced that the kidnaper and his little victim were in the foothills.

COLUMBUS, April 27.—"Weeding out" in the state liquor department store system to make overhead balance with income was under way today by department officials.

As the first step in balancing operations of the liquor store system, the department yesterday announced the dismissal of 74 state liquor store clerks. It was indicated also that only 140 liquor dispensaries will be opened in the state instead of the 187 originally planned.

Under the revised scheme of operations, based on the results of business to date, Clifford Garwick, store personnel supervisor, said that it is planned to cut the original estimate of 1,500 employes to less than half.

Roosevelt "Revolution" Ended, President Veers to Right

THE Roosevelt Revolution is now over. The President's policy of "hitting a little left of Center" is edging in toward the Center itself, sometimes even hitting a little Right of Center.

The reason, of course, is that Business, once supine and sick, once openly ready for vital economic change, now is feeling itself again.

Roosevelt's problem no longer is Revolution but consolation. It was reasonably easy to accumulate sweeping powers from Congress when that body—panic-stricken by the Depression—was in a giving mood. Making use of these powers, making the reforms stick, is harder.

This is what is behind the White House visit of Oswald Garrison Villard and other New York liberals today (Friday). The crusading contributing editor of "The Nation" wants to hammer home to Roosevelt the idea that his future lies in keeping Left.

Probably Roosevelt will concur with Villard a . . . visdom of "keeping" somewnat Left. But as for "going further" Left, that is out. The Roosevelt Revolution is finished.

Ministress to Ireland?

Mrs. Daisy Harriman, most delightful Democrat in Washington, was lunching the other day at the Women's National Democratic Club which she once revitalized. Friends were extending congratulations on the move to make her American Minister to the Irish Free State.

Once a great friend of Woodrow Wilson, Mrs. Harriman was appointed by him as member of the Labor Board. But, while she remained Democracy's most outstanding lady, and although various other Democratic women have been rewarded under the New Deal, Mrs. Harriman has continued in the job-line. Reason: She was not a "Before Chicago Rooter for Roosevelt." In fact on the floor of the Chicago Convention, she voted against him.

Now, however, there is a real chance that she may join the New Deal as a lady diplomat.

"I suppose if I really get the job," she mused, "I'll have to buy myself a green dress."

Wall Street Sabotage

Behind the refusal of New York banks to accept certain checks on the French and British Governments is the violent antipathy of Wall Street to the Johnson Bill.

The Bankers figure that the Bill—prohibiting defaulting debtor nations from borrowing money in the United States—will ruin the New York money market. They fear Europe will now go back to London as the world's great money center. So they are out to make the Johnson Bill look ridiculous.

This was what Charles de Fontnouvelle, Consul-General of France, discovered when he turned up at the New York Federal Reserve Bank one day last week with a draft on the Bank of France. The draft was to pay for the rent of his consulate, salaries etc., and for years he had been getting it cashed promptly. This time, however, the Federal Reserve refused.

"We are extremely sorry, M. de Fontnouvelle," the cashier informed him," but the penalties under the Johnson Bill are so rigorous that we cannot take any chance. The terms of the Bill are rather vague, and until they are clearly defined we cannot take checks on the Bank of France."

M. de Fontnouvelle was flabbergasted.

"We will be glad to take your own personal note," the bank official informed him. "It will be a loan to you personally, and not to France."

So the note was signed at six percent interest and the French Consul-General was able to pay his staff.

Meanwhile French war veterans living in New York and receiving checks on the Bank of France ran into the same trouble. The Chase National Bank even turned down the exchange of French bank notes.

LIQUOR STORE IS READY FOR OPENING HERE

Wilkes Building, W. Main-st, Stocked; Hinchman is in Charge

PERRILL GETS JOB

Madison-twp Man Named Instead of Weaver

Pickaway-co's liquor store opens Saturday at noon, William Hinchman, temporary supervisor, disclosed Friday.

The store has been stocked, the list of available liquors has been posted on the wall, cases are in place, so are desks and everything is ready for the influx of business which, it is predicted, will not be so great.

Mr. Hinchman, of Columbus, is acting as supervisor until the state liquor commissioner appoints a Pickaway-co man to fill the vacancy left when Adrian Yates declined the appointment naming ill health as his reason. The position pays $150 monthly.

TWO MENTIONED

It is believed the appointment will be given to Milton E. Friedman or Dale Wyker both of whom were certified as eligible at the time of the civil service commission examination. The new supervisor is expected to be announced early next week.

A new development had entered the local liquor store today when it was learned that Russell Perrill, of Madison-twp has been appointed as clerk instead of Earl Weaver, W. Union-st, who was previously announced as the clerk.

Mr. Perrill was one of the three certified by the commission as eligible for appointment but when Mr. Weaver's name was announced in Col. John A. Hughes' office as the selection for the clerkship Perrill was thought out of the running. Weaver learned this week that the Madison-twp man had been ordered to report for work.

NO REASON GIVEN

The reason for the change could not be learned.

R. G. Peters, N. Court-st, has been appointed as cashier.

Mr. Hinchman, Friday, explained how to obtain liquor in the store on W. Main-st.

The 'menu' is found on the wall. After selection of the brand desired the purchaser obtains an order blank; lists the kind he

FROSTS DO LITTLE DAMAGE TO FRUITS

Heavier Frost Expected Tonight; Lack of Moisture Aids Crops.

COLUMBUS, April 27.—Damage to fruit and other crops has been slight despite heavy frosts during the past severa l nights, agricultural experts here said today.

Fair and continued cold, with heavy to killing frost is predicted for tonight, but weather bureau observers believe that damage again will be slight. Orchardists have reported to the weather bureau that the dry weather prevents serious harm to crops.

Apples are not far enough along yet to be damaged by the frost, according to Wendell Paddock, professor in horticulture at Ohio State university.

However, there is possibility of some damage to early plums, pears, and peaches, the few that have escaped the severe winter weather, Paddock said. It is not likely that this damage is great, he said, because these early crops are already cut to the minimum by the winter weather.

FAVOR KERR FOR CRESWELL POST

CINCINNATI, April 27.—Kenneth Kerr, Wilmington newspaper man, probably will be named U. S. marshal for the southern Ohio district, succeeding Paul H. Creswell of Xenia, who sent his resignation to Attorney General Homer S. Cummings, it was reported today.

Although his four-year term will not expire until Dec. 20, Creswell submitted his resignation, to become effective upon the appointment and qualification of a successor, "in order to be in a position to accept another situation that may present itself prior to that time."

Recommendation of a successor to Creswell will be made to the attorney general in Washington by U. S. Senator Robert J. Bulkley.

'BREAK' NEAR IN KIDNAPING

Kidnapers Believed Contacted by Mystery Emissary of Robles

TUCSON, Ariz., April 27.—Law and order yielded temporarily today to the kidnapers of June Robles, 6-year-old heiress granddaughter of Bernabe Robles, millionaire cattle king.

An army of 2,500 searchers was called off at 6 a.m. to permit her father, Fernando Robles, to negotiate with the kidnapers for payment of $15,000 ransom.

TUSCON, Ariz., April 27.—The kidnapers of June Robles, 6-year-old heiress granddaughter of Bernabe Robles, pioneer Arizona millionaire cattle king, were contacted directly last night, according to a reliable police report today.

An emissary of the Robles family, his identity shrouded in mystery, failed however to arrange negotiations for the safe return of June who is being held for $15,000 ransom. She was "snatched" from a city street while returning home from school Wednesday afternoon.

Following instruction received in the first ransom note the representative of the Robles family drove along a lonely desert road shortly before midnight.

A masked man stepped from mesquite brushes and directed the emissary to halt.

RETURNS TO TUSCON

After a 30-minute conference the Robles emissary returned to Tucson. Whether he made a future date with the asserted abductor was unknown.

Although the Robles intermediary carried considerable money, possibly the entire $15,000 demanded, and was ready to deal with the kidnapers for the return of the chubby faced little heiress, he is said to have reported to officers that the mystery man did not have June with him and was not prepared to offer proof that the child actually was in his possession.

Secrecy enveloped the strange midnight desert rendezvous. Dep-

GAS BLASTS KILL THREE

11 Others Badly Hurt as Leaking Mains Are Blamed For Explosion.

CHICOPEE, Mass., April 27.—Three persons were killed and 11 others injured today, several critically, when gas main explosions demolished four homes and damaged 15 others in Chicopee Falls.

The dead:

Mrs. Mary Pronko, 40.

Two unidentified dead.

A series of four explosions, in rapid-fire succession, blew one home apart and laid it flat on the ground, and demolished three other homes.

Small fires, which followed the explosions in three houses, were extinguished by firemen.

The detonations were so terrific they could be heard for miles around and the force of them was felt for more than a quarter of a mile.

Leaking mains under the ground were believed to have allowed gas to seep into the homes, resulting in the blasts.

Father of Nine Shoots His Wife, Commits Suicide

Domestic, Financial Worry Is Blamed For Act of Perry-Co Farmer.

NEW LEXINGTON, April 27.—A double tragedy was enacted here early today when Raymond Zartman, 46-year-old farmer and father of nine children, shot and killed his wife and then fired a bullet into his own head.

Zartman died as he was being rushed to a hospital here. Ambulance attaches said he collapsed and succumbed while struggling against being taken to the hospital.

Children of Zartman said that domestic and financial troubles were responsible for the tragedy. The nine children range in ages from five to 20 years.

After fatally shooting his wife, Zartman fired his gun into his own head under the chin. He was still alive when the ambulance from New Lexington, summoned by the children, arrived at the Zartman home located two miles south of Glenford.

The ambulance attaches said that Zartman struggled viciously against being taken to the hospital. During the tussel, the farmer fell from the ambulance cot and collapsed from exhaustion. Shortly afterwards he died.

SENATE ROUTS 2 TAX PLANS; INCOME 'EYED'

Gross Receipts and Sales Taxes Voted Down in Quick Action

MEET NEXT WEEK

Democrats Leave White in Sales Vote

COLUMBUS, April 27—Working far into the night in a futile attempt to pass a permanent tax program, the Ohio senate defeated the gross receipts tax and the sales tax in succession and adjourned early today until next week when it will again tackle the problem that has flabbergasted the legislature for 16 months.

The gross recepits tax, foundation of a $22,000,000 program, met its waterloo first. It mustered only 11 favorable votes, or six less than the 17 required for passage, and when they saw defeat inevitable two senators changed their vote from "yes" to "no," making the final count, 9 to 15.

SALES TAX, TOO

Hours later after interminable debate and the adoption of so many amendments that Sen. J. G. Lowery (R) New Concord, described the bill in its present form as "a crazy quilt not even stitched together," the senate, voting for the first time on a sales tax, rejected it, 13 to 15, the measure falling short of adoption by four votes.

The original rate of 2 per cent contained in the sales tax bill as introduced by Sen. Will P. Haynes (D) West Lafayette, had been first raised to 3 per cent and finally slashed to one per cent, in which form it was when the roll was taken.

However, its initial defeat in the senate does not mean the upper house is through with the sales tax. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the measure was defeated, put forward by anti-sales taxes in the hope that their own motion would not carry, thus sounding the final death knell of the bill, unexpectedly did carry, whereupon the bill was sent back to the senate tax committee for alterations.

TO ADD INCOME TAX

A meeting of the tax committee was called by Chairman D. J. Gunsett (D) Van Wert, for next Monday night. He said the one per cent sales tax bill would be polished up and that the program would

Planes, Armored Autos Demanded by Cummings

WASHINGTON, April 27.— Airplanes, bomb and machine-gun equipped, armored motor cars, and automobiles that will go as fast as those used by criminals, will be enlisted into the government's war against organized crime, Attorney General Cummings declared today.

The war department has already offered the use of aircraft.

Cummings expects Congress to appropriate sufficient funds to provide the motor equipment. He said the government has been handicapped because the criminals were equipped with the speediest automobiles, many of which were heavily armed and protected from bullets by armor plate.

The killing of W. Carter Baum, department of justice agent, in Wisconsin Sunday, when John Dillinger, arch-bandit, escaped emphasized the seriousness of the crime situation, Cummings deferred to this slaving as a setback in the government's drive against organized crime, but added it simply spurred the department to a finish fight against the underworld.

He hopes Congress will now enact the often-recommended legislation making the killing of a federal agent a federal offense. While it is a crime against the government to assault a federal agent, there is no legislation to penalize the killing of such an officer under federal law. From many standpoints, it would be advantageous to the government to try such cases as the killing of Baum in the federal courts.

U. S. AGENTS IN 'MYSTERY'

31 Men Concentrated In New England; Probing Lindbergh Money?

BOSTON, April 27.—While officials of the department of justice maintained a strict silence, persistent reports at the federal building today were to the effect that the 31 federal agents who vanished as mysteriously as they appeared from a Rutland, Vt., rendezvous, today were concentrating on Albany, N. Y.

This theory apparently resulted from a cryptic text 21 Rutland high school boys, many of them caddies at the Pine Hill golf course, were asked to write. It was;

"If you meet us at the Union station in Albany on either Thursday, Friday or Saturday of the last week in April your troubles will be over and we will never trouble you again. On your ar-

SENIOR CLASS PLAY

The senior class play a comedy in three acts will be given May 1. Its title is "Pillip for Short."

After a series of complications concerning the identity of Phillip McGrath and after Henry Dodge has several narrow escapes with his reputation every thing turns out all right.

Henry Dodge, George Clements. Is a young business man and the leading citizen of the small town of Mayfield. He is self-important and dignifiel in manner.

Betty who is played by Helen Skinner is the sister of Henry Dodge. She is a very pretty, winsome girl of perhaps seventeen. She is gay and impulsive.

Josephine or Mrs. Dodge(Martha Conman), is an attractive young woman. She is quiet and respects her husband and his wishes very much. She is blessed with a sense of humor.

Jane is a matter of fact serious girl, about twenty. She is a bit acid with Betty and she languishes over Alfred. This part is effectively played by Jean Overmyer.

Mrs. Wiggins (Doris Morris) is the mother of Mrs. Dodge. Her manner is brisk and dictatorial but she is very human and has a biting sense of humor.

Alfred Dukes (Burtus Bennett) is a nice looking boy of about twenty, but a little awkward and self-conscious. He is the next door neighbor of the Dodges and is fascinated by Betty.

Geranium (Locigale Canterbury) is the young colored girl who is cook in the Dodge home. She has a slow tired manner of talking and will draw laughs from the audience.

Matilda Tucker played by Anna Mae Russ is a fussy little person of uncertain age and a busybody if there ever was one, but in spite of this she is quite likeable. She is a great talker and does love the center of the floor.

Phillip McGrath (William Hoskins) is a good looking chap and a typical college man, breezy and pleasant. He likes excitement and gets plenty of it. He finds Betty to be his one desire.

Spasm Johnson (George Speakman) is the faithful servant of Phillip. He is a colored boy and slow of speech and action and will prove very entertaining.

Our orchestra will go to Clarksburg to assist in furnishing the music for their senior class play "Country Cousin" on May 8. The Clarksburg orchestra will also come here. Miss Ater has planned several special numbers for both places.

Laughing Around the World
With IRVIN S. COBB

The Voice of Protest

By IRVIN S. COBB

A DISTINGUISHED bishop of the African Methodist Episcopal Church in North Carolina was entertaining a number of his preachers at a chicken supper, following the holding of the annual conferences.

Except one very small and very black presiding elder, all present were of an impressive size and bearing. So probably it was only natural that in serving the guests the host should entirely overlook the little man.

Presently the time came for replenishing the plates, and now the bishop saw the small figure wedged in behind two wide, broad-clothed forms.

"Brother Jones," he inquired in his best pulpit voice, "will you have more chicken?"

"More?" shrilled Brother Jones indignantly,—"More? Huh! I ain't never had SOME yit!"

Helen Evans
(The Stenographer)
Says...

"I Pay For Our Gas And Other Small Bills"

HELEN EVANS, the stenographer, earns a modest salary and lives with her parents in a home of moderate circumstances. She does not pay regular board—instead she takes care of the many little household bills as her part of the family upkeep. Helen finds that their gas bill is the smallest of obligations she has to meet.

But Helen Evans watches her nickels and doesn't believe in paying more for something than it is worth. That's why she checked up on gas to compare its value with substitute fuels. She found gas to be worth several times the amount asked for it for general household purposes. The other day she overheard her boss saying that the gas situation made a great football for ambitious politicians. Now Helen thinks she knows the reason for all the talk about gas rates, and she still believes gas to be one of her greatest bargains.

National census figures also show what Helen found to be true—that gas is the least item in the average family's budget. Cut its price in two and the saving barely would be noticed in most homes. But a few cents, up or down, means the difference between profit and loss to a company that is rendering you an excellent service. Isn't it better to preserve your gas company as a stable business in the community?

Bread ENERGY FOR Vitality!

Lighter Dishes, Gelatines and Plenty of Vegetables Recommended By Mrs. Geo. O. Thurn

Dear Friends in Circleville:

The balmy first days of spring are a great temptation to lighten up on the cookery. And while I am certainly in the foremost ranks of those who want less work for the housekeeper, yet I know that this very temptation sometimes leads to unforeseen and unwanted ends.

Good meals can be planned with less work; can be easily prepared and quickly served. Especially if you use modern equipment, the new labor-saving devices, the cleverly designed utensils now found in all parts of this country. But in making the menu, its constituents, Winter and Summer, Spring and Autumn should include the essential nourishing ingredients. See that fruits and vegetables, both raw and cooked get into the menus daily, a little meat, something baked which includes the cereals and grains (breads, rolls, cakes, baked rice, macaroni and other cereals); milk to drink, other beverages which are intended for appetite appeal more than as nourishers.

At this season especially when the appetite needs more tempting dishes, it is true that the heavier meats, the richer pastries, the more lavish sauces found in winter cooking may be temporarily put aside. Or at least they may be served less often and some of the lighter dishes introduced.

Fruits and Vegetables

It is now that fruits and fruit juices deserve more space on the home menu. Serve orange juice daily; or tomato juice, or both; serve canned fruits as fruit cocktails, in simple tarts, in gelatine mixtures, and frozen desserts. Add grapefruit and other fruits found at the grocers to the daily fare; and have fruit on hand for those between-meals snacks which children and grown ups are sure to want. Especially now, for the children are playing out doors more, and using up more energy, hence increasing appetite. And grown ups are "feeling the spring" even if they have no garden in which to work, no hoops to roll down a sunny path.

Green Gelatine Salad

Here's a salad you will like for some Spring luncheon. It is seemingly light, but is nourishing without being filling.

One half cup small sweet cucumber pickles sliced; one half cup stuffed sliced olives; one half cup blanched almonds; one half cup canned, sliced pineapple cut in small pieces; one fourth cup mild vinegar; a little green vegetable coloring; one half cup sugar; one fourth teaspoon salt; one half cup hot water; one tablespoon granulated gelatine; one half cup cold water. Pour the cold water into a bowl and sprinkle the gelatine on it, stirring until the gelatine dissolves. Then add the sugar, salt and the half cup of hot water and stir until dissolved. Then add the vinegar and a few drops of green coloring, to make it about the color of mint jelly.

Let cool, and when the mixture begins to congeal add the other ingredients. Rinse a mold in clear cold water, and pour the mixture in. Let chill in the refrigerator, then unmold on crisp lettuce and serve with mayonnaise. If made in a ring mold, like the one illustrated, fill the center with a fresh salad, of radishes, thin sections of cucumber, crisp cabbage, all marinated with a little French dressing, and topped with a little mayonnaise. Delicious with cheese crackers.

Spaghetti with Sweetbreads

Another "light" addition to the menu is the use of the meat organs, instead of so many roasts and large steaks. The sweetbreads are usually welcome at this season.

For the dish, which serves six, have ready: one pound sweetbreads; one and one half cups spaghetti broken into four inch lengths; one cup cream; three eggs; one fourth cup grated Parmesan cheese; one teaspoon salt one fourth cup dry bread crumbs two bouillon cubes, or two cups stock; one half cup boiling water two tablespoons butter; three tablespoons flour; one additional half cup cream; one small can mushrooms, (about one cup.)

Drop the spaghetti into boiling salted water and cook rapidly until tender. While the spaghetti cooks, heat the cup of cream to the scalding point in the upper part of an enameled double boiler; beat the egg yolks, add the scalded cream to them gradually, stirring all the while to prevent lumping.

Return to the double boiler and cook, stirring constantly until it coats the spoon. Remove from heat, add the cheese and salt and stir until the cheese melts and blends smoothly with the sauce. Drain the spaghetti through a colander. Combine the custard and spaghetti, cool slightly and fold in the stiffly beaten egg whites. Turn carefully into a baking dish rubbed with shortening and sprinkled with the crumbs. If possible use ring baking pan, such as illustrated, and set this in a shallow pan of hot water; if no ring pan is to be had, use any baking dish, and in the center use a small glass baking dish, inverted, the outside rubbed with shortening and springled with crumbs. This makes the souffle bake in a ring, leaving the center free.

Set the dish, as for the ring pan in a shallow pan of hot water and bake at 350 degrees, or moderate oven, for forty-five minutes, or until golden brown. Remove glass bowl and fill the center of the souffle with the following sweet bread mixture. Or if ring pan is used, turn souffle out on a hot platter and quickly fill with the sweetbreads, serving at once.

Parboil the sweetbreads in water containing a tablespoon of vinegar; remove skin and cut into one half inch cubes. Dissolve the bouillon cubes in the one half cup boiling water; melt the shortening and flour and stir until smooth, then add the cream and bouillon liquid gradually, while stirring to keep smooth. Finally add the sliced mushrooms and sweetbreads and cook over hot water for fifteen minutes. Chicken or tuna fish may be used in place of the sweet breads; but this dish in any case is a pleasant variation of creamed chicken and other creamed dishes served at guest luncheons.

Eggs and Sardines

Another dish for guest luncheons or home supper is made with eight hard cooked eggs; four large smoked sardines; one half teaspoon salt; one fourth teaspoon paprika; one half cup rice; two tablespoons butter.

Wash the rice and cook in enough water to cover until tender, rinse quickly under cold water, then put in the oven to fluff and dry a little. Spread half of the hot rice over the bottom of a shallow baking dish. Press into the rice the eggs which should be prepared this way:

Peel shells from the eggs carefully. Cut in half cresswise; remove the yolks. Add to the yolks the mashed, boneless sardines, salt and paprika and mix until smooth. Fill whites with this and press back together. Over the eggs spread the rest of the cooked rice. Dot top with small dabs of butter and bake in a hot oven, 400 degrees, until the surface of the rice is crusty and delicately browned. Serve with tomato sauce or Hollandaise. Enough for eight servings.

Mrs. Geo. O. Thurn Gives Delicious Old Time Coffee Cake Recipes and Some Others

Dear Readers in Circleville:

So many times the Cooking School audience asks for simple cakes to serve with afternoon tea and coffee, to tuck into the children's school lunch box and the husband's lunch box. The coffee cake, or Kuchen as German housewives call it, is ideal for this. So many good recipes are available but I have selected from them three outstanding ones which are sure to please most families.

The German recipes nearly always use thinly sliced almonds on top of the cake; blanch the almonds first by pouring boiling water over the freshly shelled nuts; let stand a few minutes, then rub off the brown husks in a clean tea towel. Let the nuts dry, then slice thinly with a sharp paring knife. Or grind in the food chopper, or chop in the chopping bowl.

Raisins, brown sugar, cinnamon and granulated sugar are other decorations usually found on top of the finished coffee cake. It is seldom iced, although the bakers in the large cities have in recent months been pouring a yellow, lemon-flavored boiled icing over their simple coffee cakes. This does make the cake festive in appearance and adds a new flavor to it as well. Use your own judgment and taste about this. I prefer the old fashioned type either with sugar and cinnamon, or with sliced almonds.

Coffee Cake

The following cake mixture should be baked in a shallow, flat pan. Use one and one half cups sugar; one fourth cup shortening; two eggs; one cup milk; two and one fourth cups flour; four teaspoons baking powder; grated rind of one lemon; chopped or sliced almonds, about one half cup.

Blend the shortening and sugar, add the beaten egg yolks, and the lemon rind stirring constantly. Mix the flour and baking powder and sift twice, add to the first mixture alternately with the milk. Last stir in the stiffly beaten egg whites. Rub the shallow pan with shortening, pour in the batter. Sprinkle with granulated sugar and cinnamon and the sliced almonds. Bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees, twenty-five minutes.

Blitz Coffee Cake

One cup shortening; one cup sugar; four eggs; two cups flour; two teaspoons baking powder; the grated rind of one lemon; one half teaspoon salt; one teaspoon vanilla. Blend the shortening with the sugar, add salt, lemon rind and vanilla, the beaten eggs one at a time, beating well as they are added. Then add the flour and baking powder sifted together. Stir well, bake in an oblong shallow pan rubbed with shortening, in a moderate oven, 350 degrees, for one half hour. Spread with a little unbeaten egg white when done and sprinkle thickly with brown sugar and cinnamon.

Bundt Kuchen

One half cup shortening; one cup sugar; three eggs; rind of one half lemon and of one half orange; juice of one half orange; one tablespoon lemon juice; one teaspoon vanilla; one cup milk; two cups flour; four teaspoons baking powder; ten raisins.

Blend the shortening and sugar well together, add the eggs one at a time, beating constantly, then add the fruit juices and flavoring. first adding about one cup of the milk. Pour the batter into the bottom of a deep, round tube cake pan (this pan is called a bundt) which is well greased with shortening. Pour in the cake mixture and bake forty-five minutes or an hour, in a moderate oven, 350 degrees.

Sand Torte

Six eggs; one cup sugar; one cup shortening; one half teaspoon salt; one cup cornstarch; one cup flour; one half lemon, juice and rind; two teaspoons baking powder.

Blend the shortening and sugar well together, add beaten egg yolks, mix the flour, cornstarch and baking powder together and sift twice. Add to the mixture with the lemon juice and grated rind. Fold the stiffly beaten whites into the batter. Bake in a square or round cake pan, well rubbed

Convicts in Traces

TODDLING of convicts may be ... condemned without going to ... other extreme of advocating ...humane treatment for those who ...ave violated society's laws.

The general tendency in the ...recent years has been to cater to ...he comfort of those behind the ...bars. Modern prisons with con-...veniences closely resembling those ...be found in hotels have replaced ...some states the forbidding gray-...walled institutions of former days ...that housed felons. Baseball and ...football have been introduced and ...other forms of recreation and ...amusement made available to the ...inmates.

None of these things are to be ...found in Arkansas, though, it ...seems from a recent news dispatch ...telling how convicts are being ...used as beats of burden on state ...prison farms. On one of the farms, ...a superintendent admitted that ...women had been "put in the ...rows" to pull cotton planting ...machinery. His explanation was ...that the state lacked money with ...which to replace several mules ...that had died. So the resourceful ...superintendent "hitched up" the ...convicts.

"I TAKE THIS WOMAN"

"He's certainly gone to pieces this spring. Still handling your affairs, Stanley?"

SYNOPSIS

After three years' travel in Europe, where she had gone following her father's death, young and beautiful Stanley Paige became bored and returned to New York to find the "something sort of sweet and important" which she felt she was missing. Stanley finds Perry Deverest, handsome young lawyer, still as much in love with her as ever, but her own heart is untouched. She longs for someone to love—someone to really belong to. Then she meets the fascinating Drew Armitage. It is love at sight. Drew's most recent heart had been sophisticated Dennis St. John. In breaking with her, he said: "You know, Dennis, you're a lot like me—you know when a thing is ended and you accept it—gracefully." Marcia Wingate invites Stanley and Drew to a dinner party.

CHAPTER SEVEN

Marcia's dinners were always pleasant affairs. She liked to entertain and did it graciously and incessantly. Tonight she sat at the foot of her long Italian table and admired the high candles in their Renaissance candlesticks, admired the yellow roses that spilled carelessly over onto fine damask, admired her husband who sat eating his fish at the opposite end of the table.

Ned was good-looking, he was a little brilliant, he was entirely successful. Marcia was glad she had married him. They agreed on all the little things in life and ignored the bigger ones. It made their relationship pleasant and uncomplicated. Ned was doing exceedingly well in the dignified profession of the law. Tonight Marcia looked at him down the length of her table and wondered how it would seem to be the wife of a Justice of the Supreme Court. She hoped he wouldn't get fat.

Conversation was always rapid and even a bit sparkling at Marcia's parties. Not being particularly clever herself, she was wise enough to surround herself with people who were—as a consequence, she basked in a sort of reflected glory. People always spoke of "Marcia's clever parties." One naturally inferred that Marcia, herself, was clever. There were a few who knew she wasn't. Nigel Stern, for instance, and Marcia herself. Her husband had never even suspected it. Which proves, perhaps, that Marcia wasn't so stupid after all.

By the time they had passed from fish to entree, Marcia had decided satisfactorily in her own mind exactly how much Angela Rand had paid for her Vionnet gown, whether Beth Crampton really couldn't have children or just didn't want them, whether or not Nigel Stern was having an affair with Sandra Frayne. Perhaps that was why Marcia missed so many opportunities to say clever things—she never really put her mind on any conversation—it was always wandering off by itself, quite oblivious to what her lips were saying.

Tonight, having disposed of these questions satisfactorily, she turned her attention to Stanley and Drew Armitage. She had known Stanley for years—intimately, she would have said and not been quite sure about it. She rather thought that no one had ever known Stanley Paige intimately. Even as a schoolgirl there had been a certain aloofness about her, a shy withdrawal from intimacies. Marcia decided the girl had been too much alone—first in a big house with only servants for companions, later at schools where she had never really lost her shyness, then those years abroad with that impossible person, her aunt. There had been that one winter in New York, of course. Stanley had been very gay that winter—very happy. Marcia though it a pity she had not married Perry Deverest then and escaped those years in Europe. And now she was back again and anyone could see for the looking that she was hopelessly in love with Drew Armitage. And the humorous part of it was that everyone had been so sure she had come back to marry Perry. And now Perry had gone off north on a fishing trip and Stanley was seen everywhere with Drew. Well, things happened that way, Marcia supposed, and sighed and looked at Ned at the other end of the table, beyond the glow of the candles and the spilled gold of the roses, and was glad she had married him and hoped again that he wouldn't get fat.

An hour later Ned Wingate, being dummy at the same time that Stanley happened to lay down her hand at the next table, strolled over to her and suggested that they go outside for a cigarette. They went out through French doors onto a narrow balcony.

He held a lighter to her cigarette, sat down beside her on the slender iron railing. There were boxes of petunias on the balcony—they moved softly in a gentle breeze.

"Seen anything of Charles Carleton lately?" he asked, referring to the man who was legally responsible for Stanley's inheritance.

"Not for a week or so—he had dinner with me when I first came back. I thought he looked sort of shot—" Through the half-opened doors Stanley could see Drew's dark head bent over his cards—as usual the heart-twisting line of his profile clutched at her heart, left her sweetly shaken.

"That's what I thought—saw him at the club this afternoon. He's certainly gone to pieces this spring. Still handling your affairs, Stanley?"

"Oh, yes—" She brought her eyes back to Ned, smiled at him absently.

"Full power of attorney, I suppose?"

"I suppose so—I really don't know much about it. I'm like father, Ned, I hate business. I don't understand it—he didn't either, you know. Charles Carleton always managed everything for him, they were very close friends."

"Yes." Ned nodded slowly. "I've heard my dad tell about them. Well, I was rather shocked to see the old boy looking so ragged. You don't happen to know what your money's invested in, do you, Stan?"

"Oh, the usual thing, I suppose—whatever money is invested in on Wall Street," she shrugged lightly. "It's never interested me much."

"No," replied Ned, equally careless, "I suppose not. Everything's probably all right, anyhow, but when I saw Carleton looking so sort of shot—I rather wondered. They say he's playing the market pretty hard, Stan."

Stanley tossed her cigarette into the darkness; she wondered if Drew had missed her. If he would look up from his table and smile at her when she went back in. If she only imagined it, or if he did have a different expression in his eyes, which was just for her. "I thought men who had offices on Wall Street always played the market hard," she told Ned lightly. "Anyhow, he's made a lot of money for me—I can afford to lose some."

"You probably won't. Carleton's pretty shrewd. He's been in the game a long time."

"Hey, you two out there," called Johnnie Crampton, "are you playing bridge—or aren't you?"

They went in. Drew did look at her and Stanley felt suddenly warm and breathless. She slipped into her chair and failed to raise Nigel's heart bid. They made three extra tricks. They had needed them for game. Stanley hoped Nigel didn't mind too much; Nigel assured her he didn't.

Measels Not A Harmless Disease

Neglect May Lead to Complication of Dangerous Nature

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.
United States senator from New York
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City

THERE IS a popular and unfounded belief that measles is a necessary and harmless disease. Because of this there is apt to be a carelessness which may prove serious. Neglect may lead to pneumonia or some other serious complication.

It is unfortunate that so many mothers take it for granted the disease must be expected. I have known of many children who have been deliberately exposed to the disease. I cannot speak too strongly about the dangers of such a practice.

The disease may be exceedingly mild in one child and when contracted by another member of the same family it proves to be exceedingly serious. It is particularly dangerous when it afflicts infants or other children under five years of age. The disease itself is easily controlled; the menace lies in the many serious complications that follow it.

Bear in mind, that broncho-pneumonia is the most common and fatal complication of this so-called "mild" disease. Diphtheria, scarlet fever, whooping cough, chicken pox, or tuberculosis may follow an attack of measles. The ailment may affect the ears, eyes, central nervous system, or the heart. It is wise to look upon it as a serious disease which must never be neglected.

Since it is highly contagious and quickly spreads from one child to another, it is imperative that it be recognized in its early stages. As a rule, the child first complains of a slight cough and other symptoms resembling a common cold. The sore eyes and running nose, make it probable the trouble is really measles.

About the fifth day of illness, the characteristic skin rash of measles appears upon the skin. It is first seen behind the ears and about the neck, but rapidly spreads over the face and remainder of the body.

The child should be kept in bed and not allowed to play with other children. Protect the eyes from sunlight and glaring lights. A good plan is to bathe the eyes frequently with lukewarm boric acid solution.

The disease is contagious until after the rash has disappeared. This lasts about five days and is followed by "desquamation" or peeling of the skin. The disease is also spread by sputum and discharges from the nose. For this reason, children with measles should be provided with plenty of soft paper handkerchiefs which can be burned after being used.

This is the time of the year when measles is unusually prevalent. If cases are present in your neighborhood, guard your children against it. Every precaution must be taken to prevent the spread of this disease. It is a serious one and must never be accepted as a simple ailment.

MOVIES

AT THE CLIFTONA

There are some things in life that anyone can afford to miss, and still enjoy a full existence. Taxes, floods, famines, installment payments, and radio imitations, for instance.

There are other things which one can't miss, and still claim to have lived. Among them is hearing ZaSu Pitts sing. At least, that's the word of those privileged to hear the fluttery comedienne warble in the RKO-Radio comedy, "Sing and Like It," which comes to the Cliftona Theatre Saturday.

Once experienced, it is a thrill that can never be forgotten, declare those who have seen the screen satire, and bigger and better laugh muscles are said to be the inevitable result of the treat.

As Annie Snodgrass, ZaSu Pitts comes into her own as a prima donna with what is described as a heart-touching rendition of a sentimental mother song. And it is around the effect of this ballad upon the soul of a calloused gangster that the plot of the rollicking farce revolves.

Before the introduction of the drama-solo, Miss Skinner was known chiefly for her brilliant, intimate character sketches. A NIGHTMARE

Do you want to have a nightmare
Every time you get in bed;
Do you want to have a fight there
With a monster thorough-bred;
Would you like to have it buck you
All around its stable room,
Like good fortune used to duck you
When you rode a worn out broom?

It's a fright to meet that nightmare
Every time you go to sleep,
Even tho there be a light there
Where the ghostly shadows creep;
It will paw and snort and kick you
'Til you think you're almost dead;
It will tantalize and trick you
As you jump around the bed.

There's a way to get that nightmare
Every night in all the year;
Everything is always right there
So you'll spooky voices hear;
Live so conscience will indite you
Every night with guilt and care,
Tho there is a lamp to light you,
You will have a nightmare there.

JAPAN TO EXPLAIN HANDS OFF POLICY

TOKYO, April 27.—Fearing the United States, Great Britain, and other signatories of the nine-power treaty might invoke the pact to force her to explain herself, Japan today capitulated and decided officially to elucidate her 'unofficial' policy of "hands off China."

A formal statement will be issued and signed by Foreign Minister Koki Hirota fully explaining the unofficial statement issued by the foreign office spokesman to the press several days ago, startling the world with the declaration Japan would not approve of foreign military and economic aid to China.

FOLLOWS DEMAND

The decision to offer an official version of the Japanese policy followed a firm request by Great Britain for such a step, and a milder request for elucidation made by American Ambassador Joseph C. Grew. Previously the Japanese foreign office had taken the stand that "enough had been said," and that "the statement spoke for itself."

Although Japanese authorities had regarded issuance of a formal statement as unnecessary, the growing demands for clarification of Japan's policy on China and the necessity of publicly and officially explaining her intentions to the world's officialdom resulted in an about-face.

Japan now is eager to take the initiative in an explanatory move in order to avoid being forced into a position where signatories of the nine-power treaty could take action under it to force Japan to explain her position. A clause of the treaty provides for consultation among the signatories in the event there arises a question of application of the treaty.

Questions and Answers

Will you please tell me how to make the glaze that is used for pie crust or bread?

For giving a glossy finish to bread, brush over the top when nearly baked with a paste made this way: Stir two tablespoons of cornstarch or potato starch into a cup of water. Bring to a boil, and boil for just a moment. The glaze is tasteless. For pie crust, a raw egg mixed with 1 tablespoon of cold water, and stirred until the egg and water are blended is used to glaze the top. If the whole egg is used the crust will be tinged a yellow color. If just the white is used, the top will have a colorless gloss.

How hot should water be for greatest efficiency in laundering? Should clothes be boiled?

Research laboratories for soap and fabric manufacturing companies recommend using water at temperatures below boiling. The highest temperatures suggested for cottons and linens is 130 degrees. Woolens, of course, should be laundered in cooler water, 90 degrees F. being hot enough, and higher temperatures produce a felting and hardening of the fabric. Silks may be washed in water from 90 degrees to 100 degrees F. If clothes must be boiled to disinfect them, put the wet clothes into fresh, hot, soapy water and boil them for 5 to 10 minutes. Prolonged boiling tends to yellow the clothes.

How can butter be measured solid? If the water method is used how is that employed?

When a recipe calls for ¼ C. butter, it means solid butter. Use a measuring cup, fill it ¼ full of water, then put butter into the cup until the water rises to the top of the cup. The amount of butter measured will then be ¼ cup. Pour out the cold water and the butter is ready to use.

Burn Something?

Do not put water into anything that has been burned because that instantly spreads the burned taste into all of the food in the pan. The burning has occurred because there is not enough liquid there and adding any liquid will carry the burned taste to all the food. If potatoes burn, put the unburned potatoes in a pan, cut the burned portions off those scorched and return them to a clean pan, containing boiling water, and continue cooking if they are not done.

Chipped Beef and Pineapple For A Hot Luncheon

When the children come home for lunch or if lunchtime means to prepare a meal, chipped beef in a nutritious, new way is a dish that treats the family.

1 can pineapple, No. 2 size
½ lb. chipped beef
3 Tbsp. butter

Drain pineapple and cut it into small cubes. Melt butter in a frying pan. Add diced pineapple and fry until slightly browned. Break up chipped beef into small pieces and remove stringy pieces. Place in strainer and run cold water through it to remove excess salt. Then add beef to the pineapple in the frying pan and add the juice of the pineapple. Allow to simmer for 5 to 6 minutes and serve with hot biscuits.

Insects Manufacture "Lac"

"Lac," a transparent, glass-like substance used in the making of shellac, is "manufactured" by small insects which swarm over certain trees in the tropics. The glandular excretion of the insects deposited on the twigs is one of the ingredients of shellac, and is also used in the manufacturing of billiard balls and phonograph records.

JERSEYS, CAPS ORDERED

Eight teams all backed by a responsible industry or business firm will trot onto the field in natty new attire when the season opens on the Southern Ohio Electric Co. field. Several of the teams ordered new jersey and caps, Thursday, and will have their outfits here ready to be donned for the first week of play. One or two teams which have not yet ordered their jersey and caps should do so at once so everyone will be equipped and ready when the season opens.

All managers are to have their $5 entrance fee, their list of 12 players, a description and the color of the jerseys and caps, be ready to suggest names for president, secretary and treasurer, and any other officials needed for the league, and also be ready to suggest possible umpires for the league.

An umpire's duties this year will be very well regulated. The official softball rule book will be available for each umpire, all he will have to do is use his best judgment in calling balls and strikes. The book will guide him on the proper rules.

DISPUTES ARE 'OUT'

One iron-bound rule this year will be that no player has a right to dispute an umpire's decision. The only persons allowed to question a ruling are the manager and captain of the team in question. More cooperation with umpires will be sought by every team in the league.

William Justice, service director, expects to have the field ready for play by the early part of next week so several practice sessions can be held.

It is expected the schedule will be drawn tonight with the Softball rule book providing permanent schedules for 8-team leagues. The team managers will draw numbers from a hat to be either 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, or 8. Team Nos 1 and 2 will play the opening game, 3 and 4 will play Tuesday, and 6 on Wednesday, and 7 and 8 on Thursday with Friday night left open for any postponed contests.

The meeting tonight starts at 7:30 o'clock and with much business to be transacted it is hoped all managers and captains will be here promptly.

The "New Deal" is definitely in effect at Indianapolis where speedway officials report advance ticket sales 50 per cent ahead of last year — The records of the organization show that most of this advance is coming from race enthusiasts who have been unable to attend the Decoration day event for the past two or three years and who are writing in for space occupied in former years — a number of large automobile and accessory manufacturers are returning to their former practice of buying blocks of tickets for their representatives this year * * *

ing powder; one fourth teaspoon cinnamon; grated rind of one lemon; six egg whites; one cup lemonade.

Mix the first five ingredients with the grated rind and add the whites of the eggs beaten to a froth. Place in a spring form, or round cake pan, rubbed with shortening, and bake in a fairly slow oven, 325 degrees, for about an hour. While the cake is still hot, pour one cup of hot lemonade over it, a teaspoonful at a time until all parts are well saturated.

Maple Pie

One and one third cups (one can) sweetened condensed milk; two thirds cup maple syrup; one half cup pecans; one fourth teaspoon salt; one half cup whipping cream or two egg whites; two tablespoons granulated sugar; vanilla wafer pie crust.

Thoroughly blend the milk and maple syrup in a heavy sauce pan. Bring to boiling over a low heat, and boil, stirring constantly, about four minutes until the mixture thickens. Cool. Chop pecans and add part to mixture, saving the rest for the top. Add salt. Pour into pie tin (9 inch) which has been lined with vanilla wafer crust. Cover with whipped cream or meringue made by beating egg whites until stiff and adding sugar. Sprinkle with remaining chopped pecans.

If meringue is used, bake until it browns a little in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) Chill before serving.

Vanilla Wafer Pie Crust

Roll enough vanilla wafers to make three quarters cup of crumbs. Cut enough vanilla wafers in quarters to stand around the edge of the pie plate. Cover the bottom of the plate with crumbs and fill in the spaces between the wafers. Pour in the filling as usual.

SENATE ROUTS 2 TAX PLANS; INCOME 'EYED'

be rounded out by including an income tax. While Gunsett personally entertained some hope his own defeated gross receipts tax could be revived the sentiment of the committee appeared to be against this.

With even sales tax proponents admitting that a rate of one per cent, as contained in the bill at present, would be inadequate even in conjunction with a small income tax, the tax committee was expected to exercise its authority of boosting the rate to 2 per cent.

Even though the committee succeeds in formulating a combination program around a 2 per cent sales tax and an income tax, many observers doubted that concurrence of the house of representatives could be obtained to enact the measures into law. The lower house previously has defeated a program of that nature.

Although the sales tax as introduced in the senate was understood to be an administration measure, the roll call showed only five Democrats voting for the bill They were: Annat, Cleveland; Bower, Rushsylvania; Donovan, Toledo; Mosier, Cleveland, and Haynes, West Lafayette, the author.

Eight Republicans joined the four Democrats in trying to put the one per cent sales tax across. They were; Gingher, Columbus; LeFever, Glouster; Lewis, St. Clairsville; Lloyd, Portsmouth; Lowery, New Concord; Marshall, Cleveland; Roberts, Youngstown, and Ruff, Canton.

Senators voting against the one per cent sales tax were:

Democrats-9-Espy, Cincinnati; Ford, Chillicothe; Gunsett, Van Wert; Harrison, Cleveland; Herner, Monroeville; Matthews, Enon; Smolka, Cleveland; Waldvogel, Cincinnati, and Yoder, Dayton.

Republicans-6-Emmons, Akron; Handley, Cincinnati; Sheppard, Akron; Whittemore, Akron, Pfeiffer, Columbus, and Wolfe, Mansfield.

On the gross recepts tax measure only two Democrats, Anna, Cleveland, and Gunsett, Van Wert, voted for it. Gunsett later changed his vote to "no."

Nine Republicans cast their vote for the bill, Emmons, Akron; Gingher, Columbus; Lloyd, Portsmouth; Lowery, New Concord, Pfeiffer, Columbus; Roberts, Youngstown; Sheppard, Akron; Whittemore Akron; and Wolfe, Mansfield. Whittemore later changed his vote to "no."

Senators voting against the bill were:

Democrats-9-Donovan, Toledo Espy, Cincinnati; Herner, Monroeville; Haynes, West Lafavette Harrison, Cleveland; Mosier, Cleveland; Smolka, Cleveland; Waldvogel, Cincinnati, and Yoder, Dayton.

Republicans-4-Handley, Cincinnati, Lewis, St. Clairsville; Marshall, Cleveland, and Ruff, Canton.

COLUMBUS, April 27.—Armed with a subpoena, R. Kirk Mea, sergeant-at-arms of the Ohio senate, was to leave for Cleveland today to notify Thomas Batt that he must appear here on Monday before the special senate liquor investigating committee and explain who purchased 105 cases of confiscated liquor from Geauga-co authorities.

ARREST ORDERED

Batt, who according to testimony of Rep. P. E. Ward (R) Chardon, conducted negotiations for the purchase of the liquor, did not answer when the senate investigators called his name at the hearing yesterday. If he is not present on Monday, Sen. Carl D. Sheppard (R) Akron, said his arrest would be ordered.

The senate committee is endeavoring to trace the purchasers of the confiscated liquor on the assumption that it was diverted to bootleg channels. Witnesses have testified that Geauga-co authorities, without knowing the identity of the actual purchaser, delivered the liquor to Cleveland in a truck, where agents of the buyer met the cargo at the city limits and insisted on taking it to the warehouse themselves alone.

rival in Albany, you will receive $1,000 for your trouble."

3 POINTS STUDIED

A threat to kidnap a prominent Vermont man or member of his family, a new trial in the Lindbergh baby ransom case, a drive on an international narcotics smuggling ring - there were the three high points of speculation in the unusual hunt of the large squad of department of justice agents in northern New England and northern New York state.

Another point was that possibly the federal agents on the hunt for a kidnaping gang in Vermont hoped that the solution of the Rutland case would throw light on the Lindbergh kidnaping.

Upon his return to Boston, Charles D. McKean, chief of the bureau of investigation for New England for the department of justice, said:

"I was in Rutland on a confidential matter. It was not related to the Lindbergh kidnaping case."

Questioned Chief McKean admitted that the Rutland affair was an extortion plot and also admitted that no one has actually been kidnaped.

The unusual investigation in Rutland had been linked with the Lindbergh case when certain officials at the federal building hinted that $30,000 of the $50,000 Lindbergh ransom money had appeared at the Boston Federal reserve bank. This however, was denied in Washington.

The French Government cabled an immediate protest to the State Department. Unable to interpret the Johnson Bill, Secretary Hull referred the question to the Attorney-General. Upon his opinion awaits millions of dollars of monetary transactions in New York. Probably there will be a Supreme Court test before the intricacies of the Johnson Bill finally are straightened out.

Fooled Again

Clarence Darrow has fooled them again.

The aged Chicago criminal lawyer was made head of the NRA Code Review Board chiefly because it was thought he and his liberal reputation would make good stage dressing. No one thought the aged veteran of the McNamara brothers prosecution, the Leopold-Loeb case, and the Dayton monkey trial would be able to stay awake through the hearing on the monopolistic effects of NRA codes.

But they didn't know their Darrow. He not only stayed awake, but he promptly became a most dominating figure.

A report dressing down General Hugh Johnson's code has been completed. The Darrow touch is upon it in a big way. The language is so caustic that some persons whisper it will never see the light of day.

But they are mistaken. The document was scheduled to be laid before the President last week. The pressure of other affairs made it impossible for F.D.R. to see Darrow. It is a safe bet that the report will reach the public. Darrow has been in the game too long to permit himself to be silenced.

Merry-Go-Round

Certain that some form of stock exchange control legislation is to be enacted this session, the Wall Street opposition fight has now shifted to trying to make the measure as innocuous as possible . . . Latest strategy is the whispered threat that if a "tough" bill is passed, it will be thrown into the courts in a protracted constitutionality test . . . The same dire warning was muttered by the money boys last year when the Securities Act was under consideration, but to date nothing has happened . . . According to Senator Harry Byrd, when his mother was asked what she thought of her South Pole exploring son's latest stunt—burying himself in a tiny cabin in the Antarctic wastes to make meteorlogical observations—she replied: "The only thing I worry about is that he was always a poor cook" . . . Nebraska's Representative Edgar Howard, who wears his hair down to his shoulders summer and winter and is always attired in a swallow-tailed coat, began his political career 43 years ago as secretary to William Jennings Bryan . . . Howard claims he speaks four Indian dialects, but nobody in the House is able to test him out.

British Ruling May Bar Them

The action of the Royal Aero Club of Great Britain in making last-minute change in rules and regulations of London-Australia air derby has brought bitter protest from the American National Aeronautic Association. F. Trubee Davison, former Assistant Secretary of War, secretary of the contest committee N. A. A. designated Aero Club's attitude as "ridiculous," charging that it would bar most American long-distance planes. According to the ruling only standard commercial planes would be eligible for the prize—more than $60,000. U. S. fliers with special speed planes, such as Colonel Roscoe Turner, Jimmy Doolittle and Jimmy Wedell, would be barred or obliged to build new planes conforming to specification required by rules. Amelia Earhart, too, Mrs. Louise Thaden and Frances Marsalis, who were reported entrants in the race, will have to get new planes if the Aero Club adheres to its drastic ruling.

State highway patrolmen armed with shotguns halted every automobile entering or leaving the city. Scores of sedans that answered the description of the "black snatch car" were searched.

2,000 IN SEARCH

The gigantic man hunt, into which the full resources of the state and county, aided by federal government agents, have been thrown, reminded pioneers of the days when Geronimo and his Apache raiders were tracked by government and cowboy posses.

More than 2,000 men now are searching for June and her kidnaper.

Not since the eighties and nineties when gun crazed adventurers, faro dealing gamblers and blood thirsty cattle rustlers packed their six-guns from one saloon to another has this historic western settlement seen such an armament.

War veterans with Krag riflers. Mexican border patrol men and customs officers with gleaming pistols, police with machine guns and hard rock miners with antiquated arquebuses, patrolled the city and surrounding areas.

More than 10,000 Tucson homes have been searched from cellars to attacs by the American Legion.

As a result of the house-to-house search Farrar said today he was convinced that the kidnaper and his little victim were in the foothills.

COLUMBUS, April 27.—"Weeding out" in the state liquor department store system to make overhead balance with income was under way today by department officials.

As the first step in balancing operations of the liquor store system, the department yesterday announced the dismissal of 74 state liquor store clerks. It was indicated also that only 140 liquor dispensaries will be opened in the state instead of the 187 originally planned.

Under the revised scheme of operations, based on the results of business to date, Clifford Garwick, store personnel supervisor, said that it is planned to cut the original estimate of 1,500 employes to less than half.
